ALUMNUS

OCTOBER

In 1907 an enterprising gentleman named H. D. Nichols made an engraving of the Bowdoin campus from an architectural projection. The campus appears to be seen from a high vantage point. Prints appear to be aerial views. Picturing the Bowdoin campus as students from 1903 to 1912 knew it, the prints make a fine addition to those of 1821 and 1860.

The Alumni Office has acquired hand colored copies of these engravings, about 27 by 17 inches on large white vellum sheets. Ready for framing, the prints are priced at $20.00 (plus 3% sales tax to Maine residents).

Honest As The Sunlight

"Justice Burton has regarded his position on the Court as a trusteeship and has dedicated himself to it wholly and without stint. His indefatigable energies and keen analysis have earned the respect of those who serve with him, as his gentle, understanding, and undemanding nature has earned their deep affection and esteem.

"We can say today of Justice Burton what he once wrote in looking back upon the career of Chief Justice John Marshall: 'As a lawyer and a judge he was pre-eminent for his power of analysis. As a private citizen he was beloved for his simplicity of character.'"

From a letter to President Coles from Harold Burton's eight fellow justices on the Supreme Court.

"Presentation of the Bowdoin Prize yesterday to Associate Justice Harold H. Burton of the U. S. Supreme Court is an added honor for the distinguished jurist. But it also calls attention to the high quality of Bowdoin College and its alumni.

"The small, historic Maine college of Bowdoin has produced many great Americans. To our mind, therefore, yesterday's honoring of Burton was also an honor — if unspoken — to the college."

From an editorial in The Bangor Daily News for September 26, 1958.

"The entire state shares Bowdoin's pride in the Maine-rooted Burton family, and is happy to welcome one of its most distinguished members, U. S. Supreme Court Justice Harold H. Burton.

"Those of us who have been fortunate enough to hear him lecture on the manners of the U. S. Supreme Court are impressed by his erudition, his wit, and his humanitarian approach to legal processes.

"Bowdoin's selection committee did not have to give second thoughts to his qualifications for this high honor."

From an editorial in the Portland Evening Express for September 25, 1958.

"... now Mayor of that thriving and important city, by all reports administering his high office to the great satisfaction of the majority of his fellow citizens; in the World War a soldier cited for bravery by two governments; today equally courageous in the even more important field of civic life; honest as the sunlight and brave as they make them; representing today others in his class and of his time at Bowdoin who have given freely of themselves to the public service."

Citation read at Bowdoin on June 19, 1937, when Justice Burton received an honorary doctor of laws degree.

THE COVER

The cover picture is another fine example of the photographic artistry of Harry Shulman, whose photos have graced the ALUMNUS, both inside and outside, for many years. This shot, taken at the Delta Kappa Epsilon house on the afternoon of September 24th, shows Justice and Mrs. Harold H. Burton '09 in the center, flanked at the left by their elder son, William S. BURTON RECEIVES BOWDOIN PRIZE for 1958

THE SUPREME COURT IS THE KEYSTONE that holds in place the members of the governmental arch that our Constitution has constructed, Associate Justice Harold H. Burton '09 stated on September 25 at the special convocation at which he received the Bowdoin Prize for 1958.

Visibly moved by the tremendous ovation he received from a near-capacity audience in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall, Justice Burton said, "I am completely overwhelmed. Such a greeting touches me deeply."

He went on to state his belief that the Supreme Court is an "umpire" and that it may well be described as "comparable in importance to the major league system of umpires in baseball. The men who drew up the Constitution were looking, in effect, for an umpire — not a perfect umpire but one that knows the rules, applies them promptly, is impartial and courteous, and is devoted to the public service."

Mr. Burton told of picking out, while he was an undergraduate at Bowdoin, examples of integrity and firmness and courage and honesty. Among them were George Washington, John Marshall, Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Edison, and Theodore Roosevelt. He praised Lincoln for his ability to express the depth of feeling of Americans and to express himself simply.

"My idea of democracy," he said, "is Lincoln's phrase, 'As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master.' People must learn the lesson of being neither slave nor master. Until then they have not learned the lesson of democracy as Lincoln taught it.

"Those in power in totalitarian states would not be slaves, but they are all too willing to be masters."

This was a happy occasion, packed full of emotion and thrills. Justice and Mrs. Burton arrived in Portland by plane on Wednesday afternoon, September 24. They were met at the airport by Mr. and Mrs. Owen Brewster. The two men, as some alumni know, were classmates and roommates at Bowdoin, where both were also members of Delta Kappa Epsilon, were elected to Phi Beta Kappa, and were graduated summa cum laude. Both later received bachelor of laws degrees from Harvard Law School and were elected to the United States Senate.

Undergraduate Dekes gave a reception in honor of the Burtons from 4 to 6 on Wednesday afternoon. On Thursday morning members of the Class of 1909 met at the Stowe House in Brunswick for breakfast with their classmate. At 10:30 Justice Burton was present for a press conference, with the stipulation that he would not be able to answer any questions on "litigation now pending before the Supreme Court."

At the convocation itself Professor Athern P. Daggett '25 sketched Justice Burton's career as an undergraduate, as a practicing attorney, and as a prominent political figure who dedicated himself early in life to public service. His record, Professor Daggett said, has deepened his reputation for integrity, moderation, and an abiding concern for the common good. He has stuck resolutely by his concept of the Supreme Court as an umpire and he calls them as he sees them. It is for his working always for the common good that Bowdoin honors him.

President Coles read the terms of the Bowdoin Prize, emphasizing that it is given once in every five years for "the most distinctive contribution in any field of human endeavor." Two of the donors were in the audience.

After reading the list of previous recipients, the President repeated a moving tribute from the other eight justices of the Supreme Court. He then called upon Justice Burton to rise and receive the diploma.

The Bowdoin Prize (worth $4700 this year) was established in 1928 as a memorial to William J. Curtis of the Class of 1875 by Mrs. Curtis and their children. It is awarded not oftener than once in every five years to the Bowdoin alumnus or faculty member who has made during the period the "most distinctive contribution in any field of human endeavor."

The selection of Justice Burton was made by a committee consisting of the Presidents of Harvard and Yale Universities and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine.

The first award of the Bowdoin Prize, in 1933, went to the late Fred H. Albee of the Class of 1899, outstanding orthopedic surgeon. The second award, in 1938, was shared by the late Harvey D. Gibson of the Class of 1902, President of the Manufacturers Trust Company in New York, and Paul H. Douglas of the Class of 1913, present United States Senator from Illinois. There was no award in 1943.

In 1948 the recipient was the late Kenneth C. M. Sills of the Class of 1901, President of Bowdoin for thirty-five years. In 1953 the award went to Rear Admiral Donald B. MacMillan of the Class of 1898, well known for his exploration in the Arctic.

At the luncheon which followed in the Moulton Union the pages of time were turned back some fifty years by one of the noblest of them all, Professor Emeritus Wilmot B. Mitchell '90, now ninety-one years old but still an undergraduate in his keen enthusiasm.

Professor Mitchell, teacher of literally thousands of Bowdoin men, including the guest of honor, stated simply, "I was one of your teachers fifty years ago. There were other professors you will probably remember. They were a noble band of splendid teachers. If they were living today, they would ask me to give you their sincere congratulations and a hearty welcome."

As "Mitch" spoke on, his audience was completely captivated and under his spell. Those fortunate enough to be there in the lounge of the Union sensed that this was one of those golden moments — moments encountered but seldom in the life of any man. They would have willed it never to end, had they possessed the magical power, but, like all golden moments, it had to come to an end. And yet those who were present will carry the memory of that moment with them always.

The second Bowdoin man to serve on the Supreme Court, Harold Burton followed in the footsteps of Melville W. Fuller of Augusta, a member of the Class of 1853, who was Chief Justice from 1888 to 1910.

Justice Burton's father was Alfred E. Burton, a member of the Class of 1878 and a fraternity brother and close friend of Admiral Robert E. Peary '77. He was for many years Dean of Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

At Bowdoin young Harold Burton was president of his class, quarterback of an undefeated football team, a varsity pole vaulter, editor-in-chief of the yearbook, winner of prizes in mathematics, French, and prize speaking, and, not surprisingly, president of the Young Republican group for two years.

Following his graduation from Harvard Law School, he practiced law for two years in Cleveland. In 1914 he became assistant attorney with the Utah Power & Light Company and the Utah Light and Traction Company in Salt Lake City. Two years later he was named attorney with the Idaho Power Company in Boise.

During World War I he served for two years as first lieutenant and captain of the 361st Infantry, 91st Division, and took part in the St. Mihiel, Meuse-Argonne, and Ypres-Lys offensives. He was awarded the Belgian Croix-de-Guerre, the Purple Heart, and a U. S. Army citation.

From 1919 until 1923 he was engaged in the general practice of law, associated with, and later a member of, the firm of Day, Day & Wilkin in Cleveland. Later in the twenties he was a member of the firms of Day & Day and Cull, Burton & Laughlin and taught corporation law at Western Reserve University Law School.

During this period he was also a member of the Board of Education in East Cleveland, was president of the First Unitarian Church of Cleveland, and served as chairman of the Research Committee of the Citizens Committee on Regional Government. He was elected to the 88th general assembly of the Ohio House of Representatives and in 1929 became Director of Law in Cleveland. Before returning to the private practice of law in 1932, he served as Cleveland's Acting City Manager and Acting Mayor.

Justice Burton was three times elected Mayor of Cleveland, in 1935, 1937, and 1939. He was for three years a member of the Board of Trustees of the United States Conference of Mayors. In November of 1940 he was elected United States Senator from Ohio, and on October 1, 1945, he became an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

All four Burtons were elected to Phi Beta Kappa at Bowdoin — Alfred E. '78, his son Harold H. '09, and his sons in turn, William S. '37 and Robert S. '43. Alfred Burton served as an Overseer of the College from 1905 until his death in 1935, and Harold Burton has been an Overseer since 1936.

On October 6, less than two weeks after "Burton Day" at the College, Harold Burton's resignation was announced by the White House. Printed here are the texts of his letter of resignation and President Eisenhower's reply.

JUSTICE BURTON'S LETTER

Having passed the permissive retirement age of 70, and having rendered over twenty-five years of public service, including nearly thirteen as a member of this court, I hereby submit this notice of my retirement from further active service as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States to take effect at the close of Monday, October 13, 1958. I do this with regret but in accordance with competent medical advice and with a desire to serve the best interests of all concerned.

Mrs. Burton and I wish to express, through you, to the people of the United States our deep appreciation of the privilege which has been mine for so long to serve their interests to the extent of my ability to do so.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY

It is with great regret that I have read your notice of retirement on Monday, October 13, 1958, as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I share, with millions of our citizens, the conviction that, as a member of the court, you served with high distinction and great dedication to the principles under which we live and the changing conditions of the world today.

The decisions of the court are helping to shape — as they have in the past — the destiny of our country. This realization has imposed upon you vital responsibilities, which I know you have discharged seriously and conscientiously. Your work on the Supreme Court was, of course, but a continuation of your earlier years of devoted and dedicated public service. Our country is indebted to you.

I trust that with the leisure your retirement will bring, your health will greatly improve.

Mrs. Eisenhower joins me in best wishes to you and Mrs. Burton, and in expressions of our feelings of personal friendship for you both.

PRAY TO BE STRONGER MEN

We want Bowdoin to play an increasingly important role in providing excellence in education to students of the highest ability, with faculty and facilities unsurpassed among small liberal arts colleges. From the earliest days of Bowdoin College, as evidenced by her graduates in that "Remarkable Decade" in the initial quarter-century of her history, the College has been a center and a symbol of educational excellence. Our purpose in participating in this conference has been to insure that Bowdoin's future will be comparable with her illustrious past.

PLANS OF THE DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

I think the following quotation from David Burnham is applicable for us: "Make no small plans; they have no power to stir men's minds." Our Trustees have made no small plans. You have heard Earle Thompson tell something of the plans of his Committee in establishing a continuing program of development, to bring to Bowdoin the increased capital resources which we need, not only for the present size of the College but also for the planned expansion in our enrollment to 925 students. These estimates, as you have heard, amount to fifteen millions, measured in 1957 dollars.

Mr. Thompson pointed out: "An organization has been developed through the Vice President's Office, but it needs the help of all concerned with Bowdoin. . . . The emphasis is on the individual; no individual will lack the opportunity to serve. . . . We must reach all possible sources of potential support."

SETTING THE PACE OF THE PROGRAM

Mr. Peters said that Bowdoin's program is a long-range, low-pressure pro-

MEN IN WHITE SHIRTS (with sleeves rolled up), bright lights, long tables, sharpened pencils, fresh pads of paper, and copies of "To Build a Better Bowdoin" — these all heralded the beginning of the Conference on Development that was held at the College on Friday and Saturday, August 15 and 16. Approximately 150 people, including 90 men and 60 women, attended the two conference sessions in the main reading room of Hubbard Hall and a lobster bake, enjoyed on Friday evening at Lookout Point, Harpswell. Representatives were present from the Governing Boards, the Bowdoin Associates, the Committee on Bequests and Trusts, the Alumni Council, the Alumni Fund Directors, the Society of Bowdoin Women, the Bowdoin Fathers' Association, and the Bowdoin faculty and staff.

Speakers at the sessions included President Coles, Vice President Norton, Earle S. Thompson '14, Trustee and Chairman of the Committee on Development; H. Wallace Peters, Consultant on Development; Dr. Arthur W. Page, business consultant and former Vice President of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company; Dr. Abel A. Hanson, General Secretary of Teachers College, Columbia University; and Dr. Henry T. Heald, President of The Ford Foundation and former Chancellor of New York University.

At the Saturday luncheon which marked the close of the sessions, President Coles summarized the highlights of the Conference as follows:

gram. Although the program will be one of low pressure, it will not be without pressure.

There are, of course, many advantages to intensive programs which force all concerned to go to work immediately, meeting certain deadlines to achieve certain goals — to "wrap it up," so to speak. However, the Committee on Development and the Trustees and Overseers recognize that Bowdoin's financial need, like that of all other educational institutions, is continuing. Valuable and effective as occasional intensive campaigns are, experience has shown that this type of effort cannot be on a sustained basis. This does not mean that the Trustees and Overseers, Associates, members of the Committee on Bequests and Trusts, members of the Alumni Council, Directors of the Alumni Fund, and all others concerned with Bowdoin can take a "Rip van Winkle" attitude, expecting to sleep for ten years and then wake up and be surprised at the changes which have taken place. What it does mean is that Bowdoin must for all of us become an engrossing interest, to which our minds, thoughts, and actions will revert frequently, and which will cause us to exercise both conscious and sub-conscious alertness to every opportunity for bettering the College.

Mr. Peters said that the need is present and the purpose deserving. He emphasized that the most important thing is that the purpose and program of the College must be strong and, therefore, easy to "sell." Giving results from the creation of informed interest and brings satisfaction to the giver. We heard from him of the tremendous philanthropic potentials which exist in this nation: from foundations, from business, from bequests, and to an even greater extent from private benefactors. Roughly $7,000,000,000 annually comes from private philanthropy at present, with a good possibility that this amount will be doubled during the period of which we speak. About eleven per cent of this figure currently goes to colleges and universities.

We won't find support for Bowdoin merely by emphasizing its needs, for Mr. Page told us so truly that the neediest are not necessarily the most attractive. Mr. Hanson stated emphatically that Bowdoin's program must go far beyond the immediate purposes of the College — that its "case" must be linked with a cause far greater than the College itself.

THE ROLE OF CORPORATIONS

Mr. Page, in his talk about corporate support, gave us some ideas about the role that corporations will play in the near and distant future. He emphasized the importance of maintaining and building the quality of college facilities and increasing faculty compensation, pointing out that we cannot expect faculties to be strong or to look upon our society in the proper fashion if they exist in relative starvation amidst plenty.

He stressed that the "climate" in which giving is being sought is all-important. There is need to bring about a revolution in the state of mind about the value of education. We must talk about service, not need. Our concern must be for the mind and character of the next generation, training for leadership and teaching liberty. He urged us to sell education as a whole, as well as Bowdoin in particular. He advised us to determine which corporations have a program of giving and how to get Bowdoin into the "picture" of those corporations. We can be confident that corporations will give, but we also should know that corporations need help from us in finding out how to give. In this connection, our Bowdoin case must be stated positively and in terms of benefit to the donors.

Mr. Page spoke about the revolution in the state of mind which we need in the State of Maine and, just as cheapness was no bargain for North Carolina — nobody came there to buy cheapness — the same thing is true here in Maine, particularly as it applies to education.

PRINCIPLES OF AN ACTIVE BEQUEST PROGRAM

Mr. Hanson, in a very engrossing address, emphasized the importance of bequests in philanthropy and told how this source of support for the College may be increased. He suggested many new concepts for a bequest program. We know how much bequests have done for Bowdoin during recent years, as well as previously. For the most part, these have been stimulated by the strong educational program the College offers and have frequently resulted from the presentation of this program in an attractive fashion to those able to give.

He said that a good long-range bequest program develops a potential income for the future, since many donors can give only by bequest. He pointed out that 90% of college endowments come from bequests, that many retired people cannot afford to give except by bequest, that persons with small income often cannot afford to give in any significant amounts except by bequest, and that estate conservation may often best be accomplished by bequest.

He pointed out also that there has been very little planned study and analysis of bequest giving. Many fallacies exist about bequest programs — fallacies such as "most responsible people have wills," while statistics show that only 50% of them have; or "people give to causes in which they are most interested, instead of causes which they may be badgered about"; or "people will perpetuate giving habits in their wills" — all proved to be fallacies by his research.

Mr. Hanson stated that a bequest program must have universal application; that it must use techniques designed particularly for bequests; that it should be turned toward the self-interest of the potential donor; that a bequest program is an educational program and a service to potential donors; that it is low-pressure, but persistent and sustaining; that it must be tuned to the institution it represents and is subject to the measurement of results.

Then we heard from Mr. Peters as to the influence of women. He pointed out that wives greatly influence the thinking of their husbands. Widows frequently carry forward the traditions of their families and generally carry out the wishes of their husbands. He stressed also that women, through their role as mothers, are naturally oriented to education and appreciate its importance.

THE FOUNDATION PICTURE

Mr. Heald opened his remarks with, I think, the understatement of the century, when he said that he was not a complete novice in raising funds for colleges and universities. But he was not making any understatement when he said that Bowdoin will perhaps become less typical of American education as a whole in the years ahead. That is all right with us at Bowdoin, because Bowdoin has never been typical. We have never wanted Bowdoin to be typical, and if we become less typical it will be because of our concentration on excellence: excellence in faculty, students, and facilities.

Mr. Heald stressed that, though there is no immediate crisis at Bowdoin, there is an urgent need not only here but in education as a whole. This crisis revolves around competition for first-class teaching personnel, a problem we cannot overlook. He pointed out that the major source of support for individual institutions remains local — not local in terms of geography, but local in terms of clientele. It is through people who have an interest and stake in the welfare of a given institution that foundations and corporations can help. Quality in an institution is not an obvious commodity; it must be sold.

IN SUMMARY

I think these are the general points of the discussion. This conference in the quiet and peaceful setting of the campus during a tranquil summer seems far removed from the vibrant life of students and faculty in term time. It is far removed from the hurly-burly of business and your budgets. I would urge each one of us to keep always in mind the ultimate objectives of the College and its consistent and significant policies, not becoming confused by day-to-day crises.

How can we assure that Bowdoin will continue toward its higher destiny? How can we be prepared for what lies ahead? There is but one way. We can do it solely by understanding and intelligence and wisdom, by constant industry, by integrity, and by a unique and coherent dedication.

In Phillips Brooks' words: "Do not pray for easy lives; pray to be stronger men. Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers; pray for powers equal to your tasks."

On The Campus

There have been only a few changes in the faculty from last year, with no one retiring in June.

John D. Kendall of Minneapolis, Minn., a graduate of Harvard in 1948 and a candidate for the doctorate at the University of Minnesota, is serving as Instructor in English. So is John O. Lyons of Hanover, N. H., a 1951 graduate of Kenyon College and a doctoral candidate at the University of Florida.

Dr. Robert E. Gahringer of Cambridge, Mass., is serving as Assistant Professor of Philosophy during the sabbatical leave of Professor Edward Pols. He is a graduate of Williams with a Ph.D. from Harvard.

James Wilson of Middlebury, Vt., a graduate of the University of Rochester and a candidate for the doctorate at Syracuse University, is now Instructor in Government. Dr. Anders M. Myhrman of Lewiston is serving as Visiting Lecturer in Sociology during the sick leave of Professor Leighton van Nort, who was injured in an automobile accident in Virginia late in August and is expected to take up his teaching duties again about November 1. Dr. Myhrman is

AS MAINE GOES —

September 8 was the last time that Maine held an early election, and as this custom passes, so passes the saying "As Maine goes, so goes the Nation." Next time Maine will hold a November election, like all other states, and can no longer claim to be the national political barometer.

Many Bowdoin men ran for office in Maine's 1958 election. Horace Hildreth '25 (R) was defeated in the gubernatorial race, as was Robert Hale '10 (R), who lost to James Oliver '17 (D) in his bid for reelection as Representative for Maine's First Congressional District.

Governor Edmund Muskie H'57 (D) won a hard-fought contest to be Maine's junior senator.

A number of Bowdoin men enter or return to the State Senate: Frank Pierce '23 (R) of Bucksport (for Hancock County); George Weeks '27 (R) of South Portland (for Cumberland County); Rodney Ross '41 (R) of Bath (for Sagadahoc County); and Allan Woodcock '44 (R) of Bangor (for Penobscot County).

These alumni have been elected to the State Legislature: Sumner Pike '13 (R) of Lubec; James Cox '37 (R) of Dexter; Samuel Philbrick '50 (R) of Bangor; and Robert Linnell '53 (R) of South Portland.

Bowdoin men who were chosen county attorneys include: Blenn Perkins '34 (R) in Lincoln; Arthur Chapman '39 (R) in Cumberland; Ferris Freme '42 (R) in Aroostook; Robert Pelletier '44 (R) in York; and Arthur Dolloff '47 (R) in Sagadahoc. John Roberts '36 (R) of Sanford has been elected Judge of Probate in York County.

Adam Walsh, Coach of Football since 1935, has resigned that position effective at the end of the calendar year. In his letter of resignation, dated October 28, he wrote to President Coles as follows:

"Many of the best years of my life have been devoted to Bowdoin College. The welfare of the College, as well as the welfare of the fine young men it has been my privilege to have been entrusted with, I have always tried to place above self benefit. . . . On numerous occasions I have publicly stated, in all sincerity, that I would voluntarily and gladly resign from my position when I thought it would be of benefit to Bowdoin. Deep in my heart, I feel that that time has now come."

Through a 14 to 14 tie against Bates on November 1, Bowdoin has lost five games and tied one this fall. The losses came at the hands of Tufts 26 to 6, Wesleyan 32 to 8, Amherst 34 to 0, Williams 48 to 28, and Colby 44 to 12.

No decision regarding Adam's successor has been reached.

Professor Emeritus of Sociology at Bates, where he taught for thirty-three years.

Mario A. Tonon '42 has been appointed Lecturer in German. He is also Principal of Brunswick High School, in which position everybody — faculty, students, and parents alike — praises him for an outstanding job.

Raymond R. Archambault of Springvale is the new Head of Readers' Services in the Library. A graduate of the University of Maine, he has done graduate work at Syracuse. Robert F. Martin '58 is a teaching fellow in chemistry, and Fred E. Clark of Montgomery, Ala., is a teaching fellow in biology. The latter is a graduate of Huntington College in Montgomery.

Snooperscoper

Assistant Professor Charles E. Huntington is carrying on basic research in biology under a five-year grant of $17,900 made to the College last summer by the National Science Foundation.

Dr. Huntington, who joined the faculty in 1953, is also Director of the Bowdoin Scientific Station at Kent Island in the Bay of Fundy between Maine and New Brunswick. He is engaged in a research project at Kent Island in relation to Leach's petrel, a small sea bird which nests in burrows on outer islands. This species lays but one egg per year. In order to maintain its population, therefore, it must have a very low annual mortality rate.

By catching the birds in their burrows and in nets and labeling them with numbered bands, at Kent Island and other breeding stations, Dr. Huntington hopes to obtain such vital data as the average life span, the extent of their movements from one island to another, and the age at which they begin to breed.

He is also attempting to study their behavior by observing them in the dark with an infra-red "snooperscope."

Budget Plan Available

The total charges at Bowdoin for the current year, including room, board, and tuition, amount to approximately $1870, of which tuition is $1050. Students may choose to make either two equal payments each year, one at the beginning of each semester, or twelve equal payments, one due each month July through June. There is an annual service charge of $18 for those choosing the twelve-payment plan.

Aid To Students

More than $216,000 in scholarship aid for the current academic year has been granted to 243 students. Included among the recipients are 169 upperclassmen, 60 members of the freshman class, and fourteen students from foreign countries, among whom are twelve Bowdoin Plan students.

A RECORD TO SHOOT AT

1916 has won the Alumni Fund Cup for the fifth time in its twenty-seven year history. Final figures for the 1957-58 Fund gave 1916 a performance score of 192.69. The Class of 1910, which won the Cup four times before withdrawing from the competition several years ago, actually had the highest score with a mark of 281.57.

Other winners have been 1898 (three times), 1901 (three times), 1890 (twice), 1903 (twice), 1904, 1907, 1922, 1924, 1929, 1937, 1940, and 1941.

During the quarter century that Paul K. Niven has been 1916's Class Agent, that group has given more than $1,000 to the Alumni Fund twenty-one times. Its 1957-58 gift of nearly $6,000 brought its total Alumni Fund gifts since 1933-34 to more than $50,000. These figures point up the opportunity for younger classes to do the same sort of thing with the same sort of results for the College.

A recent survey reveals that seven members of 1916 have served as Directors of the Alumni Fund, five have been elected to the Governing Boards, five have been elected to the Alumni Council as members at large, and eight have been awarded honorary degrees by their alma mater. Two men have received the Alumni Service Award.

This is truly a record to shoot at.

This air view of the campus was taken last May by Nelson C. Hicks '58. It pictures the College as a new student would see it if he were flying low up Maine Street across the railroad tracks toward the First Parish Church. Coleman Hall is visible at the far end of the row of dormitories. The Pickard Field facilities show prominently at the top center of the picture.

Bowdoin is also providing for its student body of approximately 815 men more than $50,000 in the form of undergraduate employment on the campus during the coming year, as well as another $50,000 in loans.

The average upperclass scholarship is $846, and the average freshman award $1,000. In all, more than 29% of the total undergraduate body is receiving scholarship aid.

Loss Of A Friend

Miss Alta Reed, friend of many a Bowdoin undergraduate during the years she worked in the Library, died in a Topsham nursing home on Sunday, August 31, after a long illness. Born in Harpswell, she moved to Bowdoinham as a child, was graduated from Bowdoinham High School and Farmington Normal School, and later took a special course at Bridgewater (Mass.) Normal School.

Her teaching career began in the Topsham and Bowdoinham schools. For many years she taught at the Perkins Institute for the Blind in Boston and at the New York Institute for the Blind. She also taught at Hampton Institute in Virginia and for one summer in the mountain schools of Kentucky.

Miss Reed had retired from the library staff at the College in 1946.

Downeast Classic

Bowdoin's varsity basketball team will join with Maine's other three major college quintets in a tournament for the first time in history when the Downeast Classic is held in Bangor from New Year's Eve through January 3, 1959.

In addition to the Polar Bears, Bates, Maine, and Colby, there will be four out-of-state teams in the tournament — Rutgers, Tufts, Wesleyan, and St. Michael's. The Downeast Classic will inaugurate the City of Bangor's 125th anniversary program. Each college will play three games, with the first round losers dropping into a "loser's bracket" and continuing to play to decide the final order of teams.

The Classic will be held in the spacious new Bangor city auditorium, the second largest building of its kind in New England, with a seating capacity of 7,000 spectators.

A Tribute To Hoyt A. Moore '95

On August 22 the Board of Trustees paid tribute to Hoyt A. Moore '95 at a dinner held at Wentworth-by-the-Sea, N. H., on the occasion of Mr. Moore's completion of twenty-five years as a Trustee. This picture shows the guest of honor with President Coles at the dinner.

Leonard A. Pierce '05, also a member of the Board of Trustees, paid tribute to his colleague in these words:

"At this little dinner, given to our guest of honor on his completion of 25 years of outstanding service as a Trustee of the College, it would perhaps be appropriate to comment on the distinction which has been brought to the College by the fact that one of our graduates and longtime Trustees has been the senior partner of one of the leading law firms of the United States, one of not only national but international standing.

"It would be proper to comment on his generous gifts to the College. Moore Hall, erected in memory of his father, is a permanent witness to that generosity.

"It would be proper to speak of the many hours of painstaking care and effort which he has devoted to the interests of the College as Chairman of its most important committee, the Visiting Committee.

"In his distinction at the Bar we have a justifiable pride; for his devoted services to the College a deep sense of gratitude. Neither of them, however, reaches the real intent and purpose of this gathering. We have asked him to be our guest this evening, not because of his pre-eminence in a highly competitive profession, not because of his generous gifts to the College, not because of his long continued labors in its behalf. Mindful as we are of all of these, this little dinner will fail of its purpose if we do not convey to Hoyt Moore this evening a realization that we are here to show as best we can our very real personal affection for him, the man himself. That affection is and will be shared by all who have had or in the future shall have the good fortune to be associated with him.

"We New Englanders are not naturally effusive, but I know that I am speaking for all Trustees present or absent, as well as for the Overseers and Faculty, in saying that working with him for a common purpose till now and in the many years yet to come has been and will remain not only one of the most worthwhile but also one of the most enjoyable experiences of our lives."

first time in its history to Canada and northern Maine. Members of the group will sing in Bangor on March 20, in Houlton on the 21st, in Fredericton, New Brunswick, on the 22nd, in Saint John, N. B., on the 23rd, in Bar Harbor on the 24th, and in Skowhegan on the 25th.

During the sabbatical leave of Professor Frederic E. T. Tillotson in the spring semester, the Glee Club will be under the direction of Professor Robert K. Beckwith.

Smith College will join with the Bowdoin Glee Club for two concerts in December — on the 5th at Worcester, Mass., and on the 6th in Portland.

On October 15 British guitarist and lutenist Julian Bream presented the first concert of the season. The Curtis String Quartet will join with Professor Tillotson to present Schumann's "Piano Quintet" on November 17. Next spring Portland soprano Barbara Hardy and pianist Theodore Ullman will both make appearances on the campus.

Meddiebempster alumni will hold their annual reunion on Alumni Day, November 8, following the Bowdoin-Maine game.

Weil Wins Honor

Gordon L. Weil '58 of Hempstead, N. Y., is studying this year at the College of Europe in Bruges, Belgium, having won the American Committee on United Europe's national scholarship competition. The scholarship is valued at $1,750.

The College of Europe, an international graduate institute, was founded in 1949 to provide study in the problems of European unification. Some forty students are admitted each year, with no more than five permitted from any one country.

Weil was graduated from Bowdoin last June magna cum laude, with High Honors in history. He was elected to Phi Beta Kappa as a junior, for three consecutive years was named a James Bowdoin Scholar, and was a cadet lieutenant colonel in the Reserve Officers Training Corps unit. He also won the Class of 1875 Prize in American History, the Horace Lord Piper Prize for the best essay on peace, and the Class of 1868 Prize in speech.

Weil spent the summer studying at the University of Grenoble in France before beginning his work at the College of Europe in October.

Assignment Afghanistan

Professor George H. Quinby '23 returned from Afghanistan just in time for the opening of college on September 18 after six weeks as adviser-consultant to the government of that country in establishing a dramatic academy in the capital city of Kabul. His trip was made possible by a Specialist grant from the United States State Department under the International Educational Exchange Program.

Professor Quinby was asked to advise on the problems of forming an academy, constructing a theatre with a professional stage, and training young Afghan students in dramatics. His report includes much that is of value to all drama everywhere, particularly his defense of literary freedom, which was phrased as follows: "The thesis play of instruction or propaganda will empty your theatres; the criticism of life — when it is fairly and honestly criticized — will fill them. The more freedom you can give your playwrights, short of immorality or slander, the more they will be listened to."

Three Brilliant Stars

Rehearsals for Tennessee Williams' A Streetcar Named Desire were started in the first week of the fall term. Directed by Dan Calder '60, the play will be performed on November 13 and 14 in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. Bill Moody '56, the new stage technician, and Edward Butterfield of Bath, who studied drama at Yale, are assisting Guy Davis '59 in his ambitious design for the play, which opens the dramatic club's 56th season, dedicated to the community of Brunswick for its support in funds, talent, and encouragement.

On November 16, 20, and 21, the College Lecture Series will provide three nationally recognized leaders to lecture on the Modern American Theatre. Clarence Derwent, past president of Actors Equity and present president of the American National Theatre and Academy, will speak on the relationship of the professional and academic theatres on the 16th. Howard Lindsay, playwright, actor, director, and producer, who received — with his wife Dorothy Stickney — the honorary degree of Master of Arts from the College in 1951, will speak on the place of the playwright in the theatre on the 20th. Jean Dalrymple, booker of outstanding plays at the New York City Center at popular prices for many years and of all American entertainment at the Brussels Fair during the past summer, will speak on the American contribution at Brussels on the 21st.

Robert Montgomery has regretfully withdrawn his offer to provide a dramatic reading of John Brown's Body with the assistance of a local cast in December. Shaw's Apple Cart will be substituted as a reading on December 12, under the direction of Professor George H. Quinby '23.

Alumni Clubs

BOSTON

The Bowdoin Club of Boston is planning a full year of varied activities. Jack Gazlay '34 is heading a committee that is arranging a series of small subfreshman meetings. Bob Bell '42 is in charge of the annual dinner, which will probably be held in early March, with alumni and wives invited. "Bowdoin Night at the Pops" is scheduled for May 14, and Bob Forsberg '53 is chairman of the committee.

BUNSWICK

Officers and Directors of the Bowdoin Club of Brunswick met at Getchell House on September 25 to plan for the club year. A dinner meeting for alumni and subfreshmen is scheduled for October 29 at the Moulton Union, and hopes are high for a second gathering in the spring.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

On August 31 the Bowdoin Club of Central New York held a very successful

Maine-style shore dinner at the home of John O'Donnell '37 in Oneida, N. Y. The lobsters were flown in directly from Belfast.

In addition to the host and seven guests, these alumni were present: Arthur Chapman '17, Edward Hildreth '18, Charles Sawyer '28, George Fogg '43, Richard O'Shea '45, and Thomas Chapman '50.

Plans are going forward for a dinner meeting in Syracuse about November 1. Notices will be sent to members as soon as details are available.

CHICAGO

On July 25 about fifteen Chicago alumni met at the Union League Club for lunch. Their special guests were Assistant Professor of Classics Kevin Herbert and Chemistry Instructor John Frey. The informal gathering was highlighted by pleasant and informative conversation about how the group might hold better and more frequent meetings and how it might help Bowdoin to draw more students from the Middle West.

Barney's Restaurant is fast becoming the favorite meeting spot for the Bowdoin Club of Chicago. On September 10 members met there for a social hour and dinner, at which their guest was Klaus Klimmeck '58, recently-graduated Bowdoin Plan student, who was making a tour of the country from coast to coast and back again. He brought the latest news of Bowdoin and gave his impressions of America and her people.

Big plans are afoot for the remainder of the club year. Members will gather at Barney's on October 8 to greet President Coles and again on November 3 to hear Senator Paul Douglas '13. Plans are still in the formative stage for meetings in February and April.

CLEVELAND

A noon luncheon on September 8 at the Midway Club marked the beginning of the season for the Bowdoin Club of Cleveland.

Those in attendance were Berry '25, Foster '33, Hickox '34, Bond '37, W. Burton '37, Woods '37, Scribner '39, R. Burton '43, Emerson '49, Barnard '50, and Klimmeck '58. As a result of elections, Richard Woods '37 is President, Edward Scribner '39 Vice President, and Virgil Bond '37 Secretary-Treasurer. Oliver Emerson '49 was re-elected the club's Council Member.

Before lunch, Pete Barnard gave a brief account of current happenings at the College and answered questions. Following the meal, Klaus Klimmeck, who was beginning a trans-continental trek "by thumb," gave a lucid interpretation of a European's reactions to Bowdoin, New England, and America in general. He was very enthusiastic about American hospitality. Many questions followed, a majority having to do with comparisons of American and European systems of education and professional training.

OREGON

Convener Dan McDade '09 was instrumental in arranging for Klaus Klimmeck '58 to speak at the luncheon meeting of the Lions Club in Portland on September 19. Klaus gave his impressions of the United States and American education. The Bowdoin men in the audience were Tom Dugan '39, Norman Workman '41, and Convener McDade, who reports that Klaus was well received and that everyone enjoyed his talk.

PHILADELPHIA

In August the Bowdoin Club of Philadelphia began making plans for another active season. On October 16 members held a stag dinner at the Engineers Club. The principal meeting will be a dinner on January 24, 1959, in the Dolly Madison Room of the Presidential Apartments. President Eb Ellis '44 reports that a dinner of roast prime rib of beef will be served at four dollars per person, including everything, for the first 150 who register. Social hour at 6, dinner at 7.

Bowdoin Browsing

This "Browsing" column has been written by Paul V. Hazelton, Assistant Professor of Education at Bowdoin. A 1942 graduate of the College, he played center on the football team and was a member of the board of the "Quill." After Army service in World War II he taught at Jordan Grammar School in Lewiston and at Staunton Military Academy before joining the faculty of the Loomis School in Windsor, Conn., where he remained until 1948, when he was appointed Assistant Director of Admissions at Bowdoin.

On July 1, 1957, Professor Hazelton was appointed to his present position. He has done graduate work at Columbia, Yale, and Boston University and is teaching semester courses in the history of education, the principles of secondary education, educational psychology, and the responsibilities of the New England high school principal.

Professor Hazelton has spoken before several alumni clubs, among them the Penobscot and Vermont groups.

More or Less Permanent Ephemera:

This column this month is not about publishing or local antiquarian societies. It is, in point of fact, in favor of both of these grand institutions. Although it concedes that there is much to be said on both sides, it places itself on the record four-square for publishers, old and new, for English prose, good and bad, and for the Civil War Centennial Committee. (In the old days, this kind of literary weaseling was called Yellow Journalism.)

Any judgments hereinafter are of a literary sort, circumspect and inoffensive. The author, not his sponsors, accepts full blame for them and he will correspond directly with any reader. All mail will be opened.

It may well be that this prefatory caution will seem absurdly unnecessary when it is learned that the writer merely intends to say that archy and mehitabel is the finest work of a creative mind since King Lear — or perhaps more judiciously in these pages, The Scarlet Letter. In any case, archy and mehitabel is one of those rare delights of literature that rise out of the welter of words in which many of us make our living, and through which we all travel day after day.

To say that we live in a world of words is to make a commonplace observation. Indeed we do, and they come at us from every direction, by every imaginable means: from the newspapers, the radio, the magazines, the fourth class mail, even — and most gratuitously and endlessly — from the pictures in the television set. Of course, much of it is some kind of advertising, and the writers are simply trying to get us to be on the same side as their employers. Sometimes it may be that this beleaguered column may want to contend that the greatest literature that we are producing in America today is advertising. I don't.

I am simply interested in considering the literature that we get from the daily, weekly, and monthly press, usually in the form of news, or commentary on the news. In a nervous age, we devour this kind of writing in great quantities; and in a technical age, we improve enormously the means by which we are supplied.

One hundred years ago, Thoreau observed and diagnosed the affliction. He said that for most of us, for the average man, "After a night's sleep, the news is as indispensable as the breakfast . . . and he reads over his coffee and rolls, that a man has had his eyes gouged out this morning on the Wachito River; never dreaming the while that he lives in the dark unfathomed mammoth cave of this world, and has but the rudiment of an eye himself."

Thoreau's is a cheerless metaphor, and accurate. It is the obligation, too frequently ignored, of all journalists not only to bring us the news but also to help us to improve our sight. Heaven knows it's a long job and a difficult one. But it doesn't have to be the grim didactic job, wrapped in oppressive piety, that some editors take it to be. We can be improved by delight. In fact, day in and day out, there probably is no better way of doing it.

All of us can undoubtedly make a list of magazine and newspaper writers who have with some regularity delighted us. And improved our sight. The common characteristic of such writers is that they are professional. Their work appears regularly and they write to space and to a deadline — conditions which too many journalists and editors feel justify fourth-rate work.

Like poverty, the pressure of deadlines and space may be incidental or irrelevant to most of the permanent literature that is produced this way. But some very good writing has been produced under these hard conditions, and one may believe that at the very least these conditions set the form in which the work appeared. A book like E. B. White's One Man's Meat was written to a monthly deadline and to space in Harper's in the years just before the war. In the same magazine appeared Bernard DeVoto's pieces which have been collected in The Easy Chair and Minority Report. For more than twenty years, DeVoto never missed a deadline; and most of his essays, professional pieces, are readable to a degree that little, if any, of the more portentous stuff that often appeared with it is.

A book that deserves to be better known is Eric Sevareid's In One Ear. This is a collection of his daily CBS radio news commentaries made during the Korean War and the end of the Truman administration. Though written for the ear and not for the eye and written under the peculiar pressures of a four-minute radio essay, they have a quality of mind and style that lifts them far above the daily welter of events.

But for me the most remarkable book that was ever written to the exigencies of modern journalism is Don Marquis's archy and mehitabel, the story of the free verse poet transmigrated into a cockroach and his friend, a cat with an extensive past. Apparently few journalists have suffered more with the pressure of a deadline and the

October 10, 1958

Dear Fellow Alumni:

I have the honor to present the report of the 1957-58 Alumni Fund. In doing so I would like to make the following observations.

While our goal of $160,000 was not reached, the $147,670.42 contributed make it the second largest year the Fund ever had. When you consider that the goal was $35,000 higher than any previous goal and that economically times were not of the best, the result is still commendable — in all respects but one.

And that one respect is this: 50% of the alumni contributed nothing at all. There may be reasons why the alumni of other colleges should contribute more in the aggregate or even more per capita than Bowdoin men, but there is no good reason in the world why any college should have a larger percentage of alumni contributors than Bowdoin.

So for this year let's get that percentage up where it belongs. Remember it hurts only for a minute and not much at that.

Sincerely,

JOTHAM D. PIERCE, Chairman

How Our 1957-58 Alumni Fund Gift Was Used

For Alumni Fund Scholarships	$ 25,000
34 Students received awards
For Tuition and Fees for Bowdoin Plan Students	10,158
This allocation provided a welcome release of college funds for general purposes
For Staff Travel to Schools and Alumni Clubs	1,286
We were able to bring to more alumni more personal messages from the campus
For Subscriptions to the ALUMNUS	12,636
The Directors of the Alumni Fund purchased a subscription for every Bowdoin man of good address
Contributions for Designated Purposes	58,580
Largely contributions to growing 25th and 50th Reunion Gifts
Our Wholly Unrestricted Gift to Bowdoin	40,010
	$147,670

It should be remembered that, because of the annual income from the Principal Fund of the Alumni Fund, every contribution to the Alumni Fund is a net gift to Bowdoin, without any deduction for expense.

confinement or vastness of a single column than Marquis. But clearly in this case the force of that pressure shaped Marquis's talent and so produced in the old New York Sun and later the Tribune some of the wittiest verse and the most delightful poetry in American letters. E. B. White in an admiring essay points out that the special free verse form with its absence of capital letters and irregular lines was in reality a device that permitted Marquis some leeway in fitting the space of a daily column.

Marquis wrote other things for his column like "Hermione and Her Little Group of Serious Thinkers" and "The Almost Perfect State" and they are still readable. They are, however, encumbered with the topical references of old newspapers. They contain many of the ideas that were to appear in the Archy columns, but in transferring the mood or the references of the day's news to the reports of Archy and Mehitabel they are transmuted, transported to the heights of greatest delight. And not only did the readers of the Sun read their paper better, but everything about them was seen more clearly because of it.

Archy viewing the world from the underside ("insects are not always going to be bullied by humanity someday they will revolt i am already organizing a revolutionary society to be known as worms turnverein") and that veteran siren, Mehitabel ("i am always a lady no matter what temporary disadvantages i may struggle under to hell with anything unrefined has always been my motto") — would that we might see their likes every day. They just don't transmigrate souls like those any more.

GEORGE ROY ELLIOTT, Dramatic Providence in Macbeth: Princeton University Press, 1958; 234 pp.; $5.00.

Since his retirement from Amherst College as Folger Professor of English, Dr. G. R. Elliott has found time to bring to fruition his lifelong study of Shakespeare. In 1951 his Scourge and Minister, a study of Hamlet, laid down the theme and method of his subsequent Flaming Minister (1953), an examination of Othello, and of this latest, Dramatic Providence in Macbeth. In each volume, an initial essay admirably lays out the scope of the book and establishes the author's thesis. The bulk of the book is then given over to a scene by scene exegesis of the play, thus treating the reader to an exhaustive proof of the thesis. While this method is certainly clear and makes the books easy to use for reference, it has its drawback: inevitably there is a pedestrian movement that reminds one of the usual college class in Shakespeare.

But for his purpose in this new study, the method works, for Dr. Elliott wishes to present a fresh reading of Macbeth. It is his contention that Macbeth as the last of the four main tragedies embodies Shakespeare's ultimate tragic vision of a man rich in human-kindness who yet succumbs to evil. In discussing this all-too-human tragedy, Dr. Elliott draws upon the great tradition of Christian humanism, placing Shakespeare in the stream that runs from Dante through Milton. Macbeth so read demonstrates how natural benevolence cannot withstand supernatural evil without the aid of supernatural good in the form of grace. The subtitle of the work, "A Study of Shakespeare's Tragic Themes of Humanity and Grace," underscores this element in Macbeth while relating it to the overriding theme of pride which has concerned Dr. Elliott in preceding studies. Wrong pride, as opposed to right self-esteem, is not only the chief of the deadly sins; it is also in the Renaissance view a combination of Original Sin and classical hubris.

This concern with man's innate sinful pride as a source of tragedy places Dr. Elliott among those critics who stress the Christian elements in the works of Shakespeare, but unlike those who grind a sectarian ax, he wisely refrains from trying to make his thesis reveal to what doctrines Shakespeare the man might have subscribed. The essential sanity of his approach is further illustrated by his resistance to the temptation of pushing the father image of Duncan and the redeeming figure of Malcolm, his son, to a parallel with God as Father-Son. At no time does Dr. Elliott make the Christian myth inappropriately concrete; instead he is content to leave it as a central way of seeing life for both Shakespeare and his audience.

Awareness of audience and playhouse on the part of the author gives additional validity to the study. Dr. Elliott has constantly in mind how the scenes might be played. If he sometimes goes too far and dictates arbitrarily and minutely how the action is to be interpreted (for example, in Macbeth's killing of young Siward in Act V), he succeeds in keeping the elements of dramatic suspense and audience reaction clearly before the reader.

The breadth of Dr. Elliott's scholarship is further shown by his sensitivity to the poetic values of the play. We have had other studies of Shakespeare in relation to religion and to the theater, but none that I know so happily combines these facets with an analysis of the poetry. Dr. Elliott is sharply aware of the effects of metrics, of the interplay of imagery, of the use of key words. Nowhere is he more stimulating than in his discussion of the fulfillment of the omens in Act V when images of the "bloody childe" and the "armed head" reach their final shaping. He constantly holds to his belief that Macbeth is "the author's most subtly and profoundly dramatic poem."

For this study, Dr. Elliott has meticulously followed the conservative text of the First Folio. As the earliest text of Macbeth, the folio reading should, of course, be followed with as little emendation as possible. Yet the critic must be wary of wringing too much significance from what may be only idiosyncrasies of seventeenth century printing. In some of his subtler readings of lines, Dr. Elliott trusts rather unquestioningly in the capitalization and punctuation of the folio;

The standard edition is the lives of archy and mehitabel with the peerless introduction by E. B. White. Also interesting is The Best of Don Marquis which covers the wider range of Marquis's work. It is edited by Christopher Morley, and it too has a good introduction with some especially interesting autobiographical notes by Marquis. Two introductions are all Marquis needs. He should be forever spared the doctoral dissertation on the one hand and the Critical Essay of Discovery on the other. He really wouldn't bear up under either of them very well. If one does not put a butterfly on the wheel (Archy once observed, "beauty gets the best of everything boss"), then neither should one do it to a cockroach.

but on the whole the choice of text is sound.

One finishes Dramatic Providence in Macbeth with the feeling of having toured the world of Macbeth in the company of a widely-learned, sane guide. Dr. Elliott's achievement as guide is his ability to leave the reader with a fresh view of a familiar play, a view that is self-consistent and convincing. After this tour through the play, no reader will be able to see Macbeth only in relation to evil but will also be aware of how grace pursues Macbeth through such good characters as Duncan, Banquo, and Macduff. And Macbeth's murders will be seen more clearly as frantic attempts to "murder" his own conscience. Finally Macbeth's greatness will be seen in his acceptance, at the end, of his damnation; for, no hypocrite, Macbeth has in Dr. Elliott's words "at least the grace not to claim for his doings any tinge of Grace."

DONALD A. SEARS

VANCE BOURJAILY, The Violated: The Dial Press, New York, 1958; pp. 599; $4.95.

The Violated is a big, ambitious, and truly impressive novel, which with almost frightening perception exposes the moral and intellectual lives of four members of Mr. Bourjaily's generation: gentle Tom Beniger; his charming sister Ellen, who eventually drank too much; Guy Cinturon, a Mexican millionaire; and Eddie Bissle, a tough little man, who began and ended his life on a Long Island potato farm. They are real people (as are all the minor characters as well), and Mr. Bourjaily has proved that he knows them inside and out — the in between generation — "too young to be lost, too old to be beat." They are, the author says, "Violated by their inability to communicate, to love, to comprehend, to create — violated by neurotic commitments to preposterous goals or, more tragically, to no goals at all."

Now, despite my admiration for his novel, I question the validity of Mr. Bourjaily's theme as it applies to any particular generation. He has meticulously and often brilliantly covered thirty years in the lives of his four major characters, all to the end that they speak for all us "violated" people in our late thirties. I admit that we are violated. But is it because we grew up in the depression? Is it because we went off to war as young men? Or is it simply because we are fallible, fumbling human beings, sadly approaching our forties, violated by the same "inability to communicate, to love, to comprehend, to create" as the generations before us?

Paradoxically, the above question is more in praise than in criticism of The Violated. For if a serious author's business is to illustrate his particular times, then a really good author's business is to do it in such a way that what he says will be as true one hundred years from now as it is today. And The Violated comes closer to illuminating "people" as such than it does to casting any special light on one specific generation. In short, if the author's intent was to pin-point his own generation, then he has failed, but in so failing, he has written a book of even higher importance.

The major construction fault, perhaps, is the book's length. It did not need to be so long, did not need so much detail (good as it often is), did not, in fact, need to cover so many years. In fact, by the time a reader reaches the end of the novel, much of the beginning has been forgotten, and has accordingly lost its meaning in relation to the whole. And many of the minor scenes are arbitrary, sometimes completely extraneous, so a reader becomes restless, tends to skip, says, "Where's the suspense? Get on with it, please. What's going to happen?" The result is that perhaps some readers will bog down, never finish the book at all. But that will be their loss. The Violated is worth starting, worth finishing — a first rate novel by a writer who sees a great deal deeper than most of the rest of us.

CHARLES MERGENDAHL

PAUL H. DOUGLAS, The Theory of Wages: Kelley and Millman, New York, 1957; pp. 41, xviii, 639. $8.50.

History, we say, repeats itself, but it needs none the less to be rewritten from time to time, partly because new facts are constantly being uncovered, and partly because our own viewpoint and interpretation change with the progress of events. So it is with the history of economic thought. Economic books are a highly perishable product. Only a few from the large annual output ever attain their tenth birthday, and comparatively few are thought worthy of a second edition. We still like to believe, as John Rae stated about Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations, that their value and longevity are usually closely related to the amount of time and effort which the author has given to their composition.

The present volume is a reprint, with important additions, of one which was published in 1934 and which was then reviewed for the ALUMNUS by the late Paul Palmer '27. The original manuscript in still more voluminous form was given the Hart, Schaffner, and Marx Prize in 1927; but only after seven years of careful revision and further statistical research by the punctilious professor and his assistants, and after several members of the board of judges had died or been replaced, was it allowed to appear in book form — even then with rather frequent use of the words "tentative" and "approximate." Occupation with the problem of Unemployment during the Great Depression, and then Okinawa and some other distractions during the Second World War, interfered with much added prosecution of the study. But in 1947, when the author was president of the American Economic Association, he was able to gather together much new data and made this theme the subject of his presidential address. This address with accompanying charts and tables is now included in the new edition, and the whole published as one of the series of Economic Classics beside works by such celebrities as Malthus, Stanley Jevons, John Bates Clark, and Irving Fisher.

In these days when we hear so much about a bargain theory of wages, about escalator clauses to adjust wages to the cost of living, and about the "improvement wage" which seeks to claim for labor a more or less fixed proportion of the gains of progress in technology, it is even more assuring and important than it was in 1934 to have it demonstrated statistically that the marginal productivity principle still governs. As the author states it at the end of his address, "there is an almost precise degree of agreement between the actual share received by labor and that which, according to the theory of marginal productivity, we should expect labor to obtain." Labor, as here shown, continues to receive approximately two-thirds of the national product or income while one-third is divided among the other factors. Those of us who believe that unionism and collective bargaining are generally desirable under present industrial conditions must assume that bargaining power still rests ultimately upon the real economic contribution and importance of the membership to the process of production. It is this which enables the union in a given trade to organize and hold its members, to accumulate funds, to pay good salaries to able leaders, and to compel the employer to pay a fair wage. There remains, however, as Douglas suggests, the question of how far monopoly upon either side of the market or upon both sides tends to vitiate the rule, and may lead to the disadvantage and exploitation of the consuming public. This and kindred problems the author will doubtless pursue if and when the people of Illinois decide to give him a vacation. An economist always has something to live for.

Authors

GEORGE ROY ELLIOTT H'25, Folger Professor of English, Emeritus, at Amherst College and at one time a distinguished member of the Bowdoin faculty, continues in so-called retirement at Brunswick an active life of productive scholarship. His previous works include Flaming Minister: A Study of Othello as Tragedy of Love and Hate (1953); Scourge and Minister: A Study of Hamlet as Tragedy of Revengefulness and Justice (1951); Humanism and Imagination (1938); and The Cycle of Modern Poetry (1929).

VANCE BOURJAILY '44, author of two previous novels; The End of My Life and The Hound of Earth, and co-founder and editor of the literary periodical discovery, is now serving as Visiting Lecturer at the University of Iowa's Writers' Workshop.

PAUL H. DOUGLAS '13, now serving his second term as United States Senator from Illinois, has had a distinguished career in whatever he has undertaken — teaching at the University of Illinois, Reed College, the University of Washington, and the University of Chicago, serving for four years in the U. S. Marine Corps and rising through the ranks from private to lieutenant colonel (with a Bronze Star and two Purple Hearts acquired in the Pacific fighting), battling the Insull group in Illinois some thirty years ago, and now serving with distinction in the Senate, where he continues to strive for what he believes to be right, as he has all of his life.

Reviewers

DONALD A. SEARS '44 (magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa) holds master of arts and doctor of philosophy degrees from Harvard. He is now Associate Professor of English at Upsala College, where he is director of the Freshman English program and teaches courses in Shakespeare and American literature. He is also the author of Harbrace Guide to the Library and the Research Paper, reviewed in the May, 1956, ALUMNUS.

CHARLES MERGENDAHL '41 is the author of the recently published The Bramble Bush, his eighth novel, as well as stories in such magazines as Esquire, McCall's, and The Saturday Evening Post. In recent years he has been script editor for various television productions, including "The Kraft Theater" and "Suspicion." He is now in Hollywood writing the screen script for the movie version of The Bramble Bush.

WARREN B. CATLIN retired from the Bowdoin faculty in June of 1952 as Daniel B. Fayerweather Professor of Economics, Emeritus, following forty-two years of teaching at the College. One of his early students was Paul Douglas. A native of Nebraska, Professor Catlin was graduated from the University of Nebraska in 1903 and received his doctorate from Columbia University in 1927.

Notes

Books by Bowdoin alumni which reached the editor's desk too late to be reviewed in this issue of the ALUMNUS are And Mark an Era by Professor Melvin T. Copeland '06, The Bramble Bush by Charles Mergendahl '41, The Tie That Binds by Herman Dreer '10, Social Class in American Sociology by Milton M. Gordon '39, and three volumes by Roy A. Gallant '50. They are Exploring Chemistry, Exploring the Sun, and Exploring the Planets.

Recently published articles by Lincoln Smith '32 include "Businessmen as Regulatory Commissioners" (Journal of Business, University of Chicago, April, 1958); "Town-Manager Government — A Case Study" (Social Science, January, 1958); and "Granting Municipal Charters in New England" (Boston University Law Review, summer, 1958).

Necrology

1888 WILLIAM HERBERT BRADFORD, M.D., Portland physician and surgeon and holder of a sixty-year membership in the Maine Medical Society, died in Portland on August 21, 1958, at the age of 92. Born on January 1, 1866, in Lewiston, he prepared at the local high school and attended Bates for one year before transferring to Bowdoin. Following his graduation in 1888, he entered the Maine Medical School and received his M.D. three years later, along with a master of arts degree from the College. He did postgraduate work in New York City and returned in 1892 to Portland, where he practiced until his retirement in 1930. He served for a time as chief of the surgical staff at the Maine General Hospital and was a founder and past president of the New England Surgical Society. He was also for eight years Professor of Clinical Surgery at the Maine Medical School.

A member of the consulting staffs of several hospitals in southern Maine, Dr. Bradford was a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons and a Diplomate of the American Board of Surgery. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Minnie Douglass Bradford, whom he married in 1943; a son by an earlier marriage, George K. Bradford of Falmouth Foreside; and two grandchildren. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

1903 EDWARD FAIRFIELD MOODY, retired paper company executive, died in Portland on September 10, 1958. Born on March 5, 1880, in Portland, he prepared at the local high school and following his graduation from Bowdoin studied for a year at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In 1905 he joined the International Paper Company in Glens Falls, N. Y., as a chemist and was later with the Burgess Sulphite Fibre Company in Portland. In 1910 he joined the Brown Company, Berlin, N. H., and served as sales manager for many years. In 1934 he founded the Paper Mill Supply Company in Portland, a firm he operated until his retirement in 1940.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Jennie Milliken Moody, whom he married on December 11, 1912, in Portland; two daughters, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Flesh of Falmouth Foreside and Mrs. Alice W. Wheelwright of Greenwich, Conn.; two sons, Edward F. jr. of Villanova, Pa., and William M. '46; and twelve grandchildren. He was a member of Theta Delta Chi.

1906 CHESTER CLINTON TUTTLE, retired postmaster in Kennebunk, died on September 14, 1958, in Sanford of injuries suffered in an automobile accident two days earlier which also took the life of Mrs. Tuttle. Born on October 6, 1883, in Buckfield, he prepared at Edward Little High School in Auburn and attended Bates for three years before transferring to Bowdoin as a senior. Following his graduation he became principal of Bryant's Pond High School, then served for two years with the Maine State Treasury Department in Augusta before accepting an appointment as principal of Caribou High School. He did graduate work at Harvard in 1910-11 and then became principal of Biddeford High School. Following four years as principal of Bridgton Academy, he was named superintendent of schools in Buckfield. In 1919 he moved to Kennebunk, where he was active in banking for some years, served as superintendent of schools from 1925 to 1933, and became postmaster in 1947. He retired in 1956.

During World War II he spent a year as Chief of the Chemical Warfare Branch at Fort Benjamin Harrison in Indiana, with the rank of captain. He also spent five years during the 1930's with the Civilian Conservation Corps. Surviving are a son, Dr. Charles L. Tuttle '37, and three grandchildren.

1911 WILLIAM CLINTON ALLEN, who for twenty-eight years with Mrs. Allen taught at the Rye Country Day School, died in Boothbay Harbor on August 26, 1958. Born on July 21, 1887, in Cloquet, Minn., he prepared at the Tome School in Fort Deposit, Md., and following his graduation from Bowdoin was with the American Woolen Company for a year before going to Duluth, Minn., where he remained until 1920 with the Smith and Allen Piano Company. He then turned to teaching and was a member of the faculty at Germantown Academy, Temple University High School, and Oak Lane Country Day School in Pennsylvania until 1927, when he went to the Rye Country Day School. There he was head of the science department and Dean of Boys while Mrs. Allen taught history in the Girls' Upper School. They retired in June of 1955. Both Mr. and Mrs. Allen received master of arts degrees from the University of Pennsylvania.

Surviving are Mrs. Allen, the former Marguerite Fitzgerald, whom he married in Maysville, Ky., on May 25, 1912; their daughter, Mrs. Frances-Ann Allen Lee of Clarence, N. Y.; and two grandchildren. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1913 LEON ALFRED DODGE, President of the First National Bank of Damariscotta from 1932 until his retirement in 1954, died at his home in Damariscotta on August 31, 1958. Born on March 22, 1891, in that town, he prepared at Lincoln Academy and following his graduation from Bowdoin joined New England Telephone and Telegraph Company in Springfield, Mass. He was transferred to Bangor in 1916, served as a Navy ensign during World War I, and was named cashier of the First National Bank in Damariscotta in 1920. For many years he was also a director of the Federal Reserve Bank in Boston and was president and a director of Miles Memorial Hospital in Damariscotta.

A past president of the Maine Bankers Association, he served on the executive council of the American Bankers Association, was president of the Winslow Insurance Agency in Damariscotta, and was a trustee and treasurer of Lincoln Academy. He was also president of the Lincoln County Historical and Cultural Association, a director of the Lincoln Home for the Aged, and a member of the American Legion and the Masons. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Christine Huston Dodge, whom he married in Newcastle on June 24, 1916; two sons, Joel Huston and Leon A. jr.; a brother, Rex W. of Portland; and a sister, Mrs. Hollis Alden of Worcester, Mass. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

Word has also been received of the death of the following Alumni. Appropriate notice will appear in the December Alumnus.

1917 EUGENE MORRILL GILLESPIE, retired Bell Telephone Company accountant, died at the Togus Veterans Hospital on September 10, 1958. Born on October 18, 1896, in Chelsea, he prepared at Gardiner High School and following his graduation from Bowdoin enlisted in the Army as a private. He spent fourteen months in France and Belgium during World War I as a member of the 80th Division. For ten years he was a supervisor in the accounting department of Bell Telephone Company in Philadelphia. A member of the American Legion, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Hazel Cobb Gillespie, whom he married in Gardiner on July 17, 1920; a son, Captain Richard E. of Fort Sill, Okla.; a sister, Mrs. May G. Strickland of Augusta; and two granddaughters. His fraternity was Delta Upsilon.

1923 STUART RICHMOND DUDGEON died in New Bedford, Mass., on August 4, 1958. Born on October 23, 1901, in New Bedford, he prepared at the local high school and following his graduation from Bowdoin made his home in Mattapoisett, Mass. He moved to Provincetown several years ago. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Alyce Crosby Dudgeon, whom he married on July 6, 1926; in Newtonville, Mass.; two daughters, Mrs. Paul Glennon and Mrs. Alan Perkins, both of Mattapoisett; a son, Stuart, also of Mattapoisett; two brothers, Harold R. '21 and Philip S. of New Bedford; three sisters, Mrs. Faith Taylor of Hillsborough, Calif., Mrs. Hope Chace of Concord, Mass., and Mrs. Constance Lambrethsen of Hartsdale, N. Y.; and several grandchildren. His fraternity was Delta Upsilon.

1926 JEROME LEVITT WATSON, head of the purchasing and stores department of Florida Power Corporation from 1940 to 1955, died in St. Petersburg, Fla., on September 1, 1958. Born in Portland on September 27, 1903, he was the son of William L. Watson '02 and prepared at Georgia Military Academy. He attended Bowdoin for one year and joined Florida Power in 1924. He was a past president of the Florida Purchasing Agents Association, was active in the American Red Cross, and was a director of the American Legion Crippled Children's Hospital.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Florence Sorrich Watson; his mother, Mrs. William L. Watson; a son, William L. II; a daughter, Mrs. Sam R. Long; and five grandchildren, all of St. Petersburg. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1927 ROBERT TAFT OLMSTEAD, who for many years taught biology and directed dramatics at The Taft School in Watertown, Conn., died at his home in Brewster, Mass., on August 29, 1958. Born in Atlantic, Mass., on April 4, 1904, he prepared at Newton (Mass.) High School and spent his freshman year at the University of New Hampshire before transferring to Bowdoin. Following his graduation in 1927 he taught for a year at Phillips Andover Academy, where he also coached football and hockey. He also taught at the Browning School in New York City, the Short Hills School in New Jersey, and the Cambridge School in Massachusetts before joining the faculty at The Taft School in 1934. In addition to his other duties there, he coached football, baseball, and hockey. He retired several years ago because of poor health. Surviving are a son, Robert T. jr., and a daughter, Elizabeth, both of Brewster; and two sisters, Mrs. John F. Loud of Lincoln, Mass., and Mrs. Lyman Olmstead of Boston. His fraternity was Zeta Psi.

1934 JOHN DONO BROOKES, owner of Alwinco, Inc., aluminum window firm in Indianapolis, Ind., died in that city on August 8, 1958. Born on October 9, 1910, in Williamsport, Pa., he prepared for college at Malden (Mass.) High School and at the Huntington School and attended Bowdoin for two years. During World War II he served as a captain in the Army Air Corps and following the war joined the electronics department of the General Electric Company in Chicago. He moved to Indianapolis about six years ago. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Marilyn Brookes; two sons, Jonathan and Jeffrey; a daughter, Shelley; three brothers, a sister, and his mother, Mrs. George D. Brookes of Boston. His fraternity was Beta Theta Pi.

1935 ARTHUR CEDRIC WALLBERG died in New Smyrna Beach, Fla., on August 1, 1958. Born on December 7, 1912, in Providence, R. I., he prepared at North High School in Worcester, Mass., and attended Bowdoin for a year and a half. He became an announcer for a Providence radio station and later went to Worcester. In 1948 he joined the staff of WBAL in Baltimore, Md. Five years later he went to Orlando, Fla., where he was an announcer with WDBO. He also worked in Daytona Beach as a salesman for Hammond Organ Studio and was employed as a musician in several clubs in that area. Surviving are his mother, Mrs. Emily L. Wallberg; his wife, Mrs. Jane Clay Wallberg, whom he married in New York City on February 10, 1945; three sons, Arthur jr., William, and Lindstrom; two brothers, and a sister. His fraternity was Beta Theta Pi.

1941 WARREN FREDERICK HAWLEY, JR., a draftsman in the Bath Iron Works for many years, died in Portland on September 1, 1958. Born on March 9, 1918, in Bath, he prepared at Morse High School and attended Bowdoin for one year. Since 1939 he had been employed at the Bath Iron Works, first as a member of the outfitting department and since 1950 in the drafting room. He was a member of the Bath Lodge of Elks, the Masons, and the Young Republicans Club. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Esther Drummond Hawley, whom he married in Bath on June 2, 1951; his mother, Mrs. Warren F. Hawley of Bath; and a brother, Sumner A. Hawley '45. His fraternity was Psi Upsilon.

The Class held its mid-summer picnic on August 23 at the summer home of Class President William S. Linnell, at Sebago Lake, North Windham. This was the thirty-first summer we have gotten together. Over sixty were present, including members of the Class, their families, and guests.

Many of the College faculty and their wives attended: Vice President and Mrs. Bela Norton; Professor and Mrs. Tillotson; Mrs. Sue Burnett came with her brother Tom Winchell and Edith Weatherill; Mrs. Edith Sills accompanied Mrs. Katharine Drummond and Mrs. Adelaide Holt; Clement and Myrtie Robinson represented Dwight Robinson, who had been a member of the Class; Mr. and Mrs. Seward Marsh; Joseph and Bertha Davis and Dr. and Mrs. Carl Robinson represented the Class of 1908.

There were sixteen of the Class and their families present: Dr. and Mrs. Soc Adams; Neal and Margaret Allen; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bennett; George Craigie; Neil Doherty; Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Duddy; Mr. and Mrs. Seth Haley; Mr. and Mrs. John Halford; Glenn and Grace Lawrence; most of the Linnell family (including the grandchildren); John and Dorothy Leydon; Dr. and Mrs. Merle Webber; Dr. and Mrs. Millard Webber; Mr. and Mrs. Osgood Pike; Bill and Grace Roberts; Tom Winchell (as mentioned above); and Everett and Mrs. Giles and son.

We missed particularly Leon Mineher and Malon Whipple, for whom a birthday cake was brought by the Merle Webbers, and Roscoe and Dorothy Hupper, who had been obliged to return to New York just before the picnic.

Dr. and Mrs. Rufus Stetson '08, who are generally with us, could not come this time, and Mr. and Mrs. Herb Lowell, formerly of our Class, could not make it. Bill Snow, our Class Poet, had speaking engagements and could not be with us.

Ralph Small is now at the Cliff Manor Nursing Home in Fall River, Mass.

415 Congress Street
Portland

Our faithful and hard-working Secretary happily announces that he retired on July 31 as general agent of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company but that he will retain a minor consultative connection with the company. Dwight's father, the late Charles Everett Sayward of the Bowdoin Class of 1884, was the John Hancock general agent in Maine in 1916. Dwight joined him upon graduation, was taken into partnership in 1930, and became sole general agent seven years later. Besides being a constant inspiration to Bowdoin's Best-Loved Class all these years, Dwight has served Bowdoin well as a member of the Alumni Council and as a director and chairman of the Alumni Fund. (This class note was written by 1916's Class Agent because Dwight is far too modest to mention himself thus.)

Wellington Bamford, who retired last year as purchasing agent and general storekeeper of the Bangor and Aroostook Railroad after 38 years in the railroad's service, spent last winter in California, far from Aroostook's cold.

Win and Anna Bancroft spent the summer in Europe. Win proudly reports the arrival of a granddaughter, born on his 65th birthday.

Late in the spring Win was one of a selected group of civilians who attended a Navy League convention in San Francisco to get inside information from top scientific people on new weapons and methods. The group went to Mare Island Navy Yard to examine several ultra-new submarines under construction.

Vaughan Burnham has made an excellent recovery from his serious heart attack of a year ago.

Larry Cartland, who has been directing the rehabilitation of the textile industry in South Korea ever since World War II, is now back in the States and has retired from all business activity. His address is 25 Charlestown Road, Claremont, N. H. Before he left Korea, he received 16 citations from the government, textile associations, and mills.

Sam Fraser went back to the Philippines early in the year to look over his business interests there. He is now at home.

Ted Hawes retired on June 30 following many years with the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company. He and Harriet spent the next two months traveling the coast of Maine and Nova Scotia.

Alden Head's daughter, Priscilla, was married in June to Dean Footman of Bangor. Alden, who owns and manages Bangor's leading tourist agency, recently booked one Mrs. James Bowdoin, whose husband is a direct descendent of Governor James Bowdoin.

1916's annual European reunion was held early in September when the Don Hights and the Herb Fosters, who had been traveling in different parts of the Continent, met in Amsterdam.

President Bill Ireland of Boston's Second Bank-State Street Trust Company was recently paid high tribute by the Wall Street Journal, which named him an outstanding banker in New England for "promoting good business and good business relations." The award is given only to those who are considered "leading industrialists and business men of the country." As a token of the occasion and the citation, the Journal presented Bill with a most unusual wood carving of himself, executed by skillful Finnish artists on klobbol wood.

Larry Irving, still in far away Alaska, is preparing to spend the winter at a spot called Old Crow in the Yukon Territory, studying the adaptation of the Kutchin Indians to cold. A grant from the National Science Foundation permits participation of three Norwegian scientists, another from the U. S., a Canadian, and Larry's own party of three. Larry has been appointed an Honorary Research Associate of the Smithsonian Institution following ten years of association with its staff in studying the geographical distribution of birds in arctic Alaska.

At the opening of Bangor Theological Seminary on September 16, Walter L. Cook was inaugurated as Harry Trust Professor of Preaching and Pastoral Relations. Harry himself delivered the principal address.

The Generations-Yet-Unborn Fund now stands at $560.60. This Fund, established by a $500 gift at our Fortieth Reunion, is to be held in trust by the College with interest compounding until the year 2116, the 200th anniversary of our graduation. By that time, assuming interest earnings at average rates, the Fund will be approximately $265,000, to be used as the then Governing Boards may determine.

1917 Secretary, Noel C. Little

A Further Report On Admissions

DIRECTOR OF ADMISSIONS Hubert S. Shaw '36 recently sent a report to secondary school principals and guidance counselors. We believe that many alumni will be interested in the substance of this report, which contains some interesting information about the Class of 1962 and some facts about the formation of the Class of 1963.

"In recent years," Mr. Shaw writes, "conditions pertaining to admissions to Bowdoin College have remained fairly uniform. Application procedure, time schedule, number of applicants, size of entering classes, and scholarship awards have continued with only minor deviations in essentially the same pattern.

"The 'numbers' problem still plagues us," he says. "For many years we have been assuring a candidate of his admission in advance of the formal date of notification in April, whenever his qualifications are known to us and when he states a clear interest in attending Bowdoin. We shall continue this policy without demanding a payment of an admission fee until the usual date in the spring, in the hope that many of these candidates will not file second applications. We cannot, of course, give a 'yes' or 'no' answer to every inquiry, but we do know that each one that can be settled will help in solving the problem of multiple applications about which we all complain."

Mr. Shaw goes on to explain that all personal interviews at the College must be scheduled before March 28; the Admissions Office devotes the month of April to the final selection of the new freshman class, and it cannot interrupt its selection meetings to interview last-minute applicants who might have visited the campus earlier.

Students and their parents are urged to make appointments in advance whenever possible. The Director and the Assistant are always happy to talk to a boy and his parents together, but people who drop in without making appointments in advance run the risk of not being interviewed if the schedule is so heavy that they cannot be accommodated.

The College is seeking 220 freshmen for the Class of 1963. The deadline for filing applications for admission and also for scholarship aid is March 1, 1959. Students applying for prematriculation scholarships should complete the College Scholarship Service Form, available at the Admissions Office.

Several other things which will interest prospective admissions candidates are these: the application fee is ten dollars; final notices about admissions and scholarships will be mailed during the week of April 20; and the admissions fee of twenty-five dollars is due by May 2, unless the candidate needs an extension of time to hear from other colleges, especially those in the Ivy League. As for the College Board Examinations, all candidates must take the Scholastic Aptitude Tests no later than March. In some cases the Admissions Office will advise candidates to take certain specific Achievement Tests, but these are not required of most candidates.

This year the expenses for a student at Bowdoin average a little over $2,200. This includes $1,866 for tuition, room, board, and fees, plus about $350 for spending money, recreation, and incidentals.

There were 946 bona fide applicants for admission to the Class of 1962. Of this number 408 were accepted, and 223 enrolled in September. Fifty-four sons of alumni applied for admission, forty were accepted, and twenty-eight eventually matriculated.

The College Board Scholastic Aptitude Tests have scores which range from 200 to 800. This year's freshman class had a median score of 550 in Verbal Aptitude and 583 in Math Aptitude. Seventy-one per cent of the freshmen scored 500 or better on their verbal tests, and ninety-one and a half per cent were over 500 in their math tests.

Another indication of the quality of the students now entering Bowdoin is their secondary school class rankings: of the public school entrants (comprising two thirds of the freshmen) 79.7% were in the top fifth of their senior classes, and 14.4% were in the second fifth of their classes; of those entering from private schools (one-third of the freshmen) 36% were in the top fifth of their classes, and 21.3% were in the second fifth.

These statistics will vary slightly from year to year, but they tend to be quite stable. The shifts which do occur indicate that admission to the College is becoming a bit more competitive every year, and, consequently, Bowdoin is getting boys with slightly better academic promise. This should assure alumni that Bowdoin is striving successfully to maintain its position of leadership among the colleges of the country. The interest and assistance of Bowdoin men remain important and irreplaceable, however, especially if the College is to continue admitting freshmen who represent our fair share of the best that are available.

So Can Bowdoin

"This college never did and never will permit a desire for undefeated teams to affect its overall policy. At the same time, if we are practical, we have to admit that any program to have any real meaning must have a measure of success in actual games won.

"A small college of high standards located off the beaten path in the northeast corner of the country needs to do an exceptional selling job, needs to organize and use all of its resources, if, over the long haul, it is to have its full share of the type of undergraduate, student, leader, and athlete, that the best institutions in this country want for themselves.

"Harvard is considered a fair institution from the educational point of view. And Harvard recently decided that the most desirable sub-freshman would not automatically enroll there because of their inherent prestige. They decided to go out and sell Harvard all over the United States. In the course of this selling job they somehow attracted more athletes than they had been getting. Don't bet against too many Harvard teams in the next few years. What Harvard can do, fairly and honestly and without any change in standards, we can do."

These three paragraphs are in quotation marks because they are, word for word, what Director of Athletics Mal Morrell '24 said in the Moulton Union at a testimonial dinner for Adam Walsh on the night of December 2.

It seems safe to say that for Bowdoin to do "an exceptional selling job," all elements of the College must pull together and pull strongly. This means alumni, faculty, staff, undergraduates. If one element catches a crab, so to speak, the boat is slowed up and all the people in it — presumably alumni, faculty, staff, and undergraduates — are slowed up by that much. A lot of crabs, a lot of slowing up, until the boat is hardly making headway at all.

An individual alumnus can pull strongly in several ways. When he finds a prospect in whom he is interested, he should write to the Admissions Office, giving the boy's name, address, and school. Once he learns from the Admissions Office that his candidate is a good one, the single most valuable thing that he can do is to arrange a visit to the campus by the boy, particularly while college is in session. There is no expense to the candidate while he is on campus; he will be the guest of one of the fraternities.

According to the Admissions Office, "The most effective approaches in interesting outstanding candidates in the College have been small, informal meetings in alumni houses, alumni club dinners, and individual contacts by alumni." With the help of the admissions staff, any individual alumnus may arrange a meeting to develop further the interest of good prospects from his area.

And, who knows, in the course of this vital "selling job," we may discover, just as Harvard has, that somehow we are helping to attract more athletes — even perhaps football players — than Bowdoin has been getting.

But all of us — administrative officers, coaches, teachers, staff, undergraduates, and alumni — must pull together. If we don't, we may not founder, but we won't make much forward progress either.

Scouts, Schools, and Collections — Oxford Style

by Roger Howell jr. '58, Bowdoin's 15th Rhodes Scholar

FOR THE AMERICAN, taking up residence at Oxford is mirrored in the acquisition of an entirely new lexicon of collegiate dialect. Words that had one accepted meaning on our side of the Atlantic are found to mean something quite different on the other side. Daniel Boone may have been a scout, but so is the gentleman who wakes you up in the morning, cleans your room, waits on you at the table, and makes your bed. Schools were buildings where the young obtained education; here they are a set of examination papers set at the end of the undergraduate course, a vast searching set of papers that determine the rare first, the more common second or third class degree. Collections were taken in church; here they are a name for a set of practice examination papers set by the individual colleges to prepare their students for schools.

This last statement reveals what is perhaps most confusing of all to the observer of Oxford, the relationship between colleges and the university. For the university as such is not a visible thing; everywhere in Oxford there are individual colleges; few in number are the actual university buildings. Without discussing the complex relationship in any great detail, I would like to make clear that the colleges are quite separate institutions in themselves. They have their own libraries, their own staff, their own halls (dining rooms). A student is not admitted to the university until he is admitted to the college of his choice. The university, to the undergraduate mind, exists to set examinations, to exercise a final authority in the form of the university proctors, to grant degrees. The college is the center of his life.

Within the undergraduate body, there are basically two types of students, the scholars, who have won closed scholarships offered by the individual colleges, and the commoners, all the rest. They are distinguished by the type of gown that they wear, the scholar's gown being fuller than that of the commoner. The wearing of a gown seems odd to many Americans, perhaps because some of them interpret it in the wrong way; they seem to think that it is some strange English variety of the freshman's beanie. Actually, it is far from this; it is nearer to being a badge of honor. The British student who has gained a place at either Oxford or Cambridge has gained it in the face of a competition for places that makes competition for entrance to an American college seem ridiculously tame, and he has gained it through proficiency in stiff examination papers set by both the government and the individual colleges. The gown is basically a symbol of seriousness and dedication to the motto of the university, Dominus, illuminatio mea.

Perhaps what impresses the American most deeply about Oxford in his first weeks is the sense of tradition. It is not a false sense of tradition, self-consciously preserved and pointed out to the visitor; it is not even talked about much. It is there, real and very alive, and the newcomer feels it at once. He accepts it and it becomes very quickly a part of him as much as it is a part of every stone in the ancient buildings and a part of every other student who walks across the quadrangle. It is a great facet of his education, a liberal education in stone and attitude, the essential factor in adjustment to academic life in Oxford.

The academic year at Oxford is divided into three terms, Michaelmas, Hilary, and Trinity, each of which lasts eight weeks. In those periods, the student will attend tutorials and lectures for his academic life, parties, lectures, concerts, plays for his social life, sports for relaxation. On the surface, this does not seem much different from the pattern of life at Bowdoin or at any other American college, but, in reality, a wide gulf separates the two. The entire approach to life is different. The students here seem much more interested in things, not just in studies but in life around them. It can be argued that this just seems to be the case because there are more students, but I do not think that follows. They are active, interested, and alert because they have had to earn a place at the university. The Oxford or Cambridge B.A. is not just a trifle that everyone collects before stepping out to endure the more sordid business of making a living; it is a degree won only by hard work and keen interest. There is no place for the uninterested undergraduate in Oxford. If he managed to gain admittance, he would be sent down in due course.

Although I will deal more fully with the system of instruction in my second article, I should perhaps at this point indicate something of its nature. Unlike the American system, it does not revolve around lectures, a system of instruction which persists, as Bertrand Russell has stated, only because the modern academic world has not become aware of the medieval invention of printing. The core of the instructional system is the tutorial. Each student is assigned a tutor in his subject when he arrives. In the case of an American reading history in two years instead of three (the normal length of the undergraduate course) two tutors will be assigned, for he will be expected to do some doubling up. Each week the tutor will present his student with an extensive reading list on some aspect of the period they are discussing together. The student will work through the reading and write an essay based on it which he reads to his tutor at the next tutorial. The tutor will then criticize it, question the student on the points he has made, and sum up the main considerations in the argument. The relationship between students and tutor is informal, lively, and at the same time serious. The work that the tutor demands is extensive, scholarly, and invigorating. Besides the reading lists which the tutor suggests for any one week, he will suggest even more extensive reading lists for the vacations. The Oxford student is expected to work and work very hard in his vacs; the fact that only half the year is spent officially in residence does not mean that he has half a year to spend in idleness. Far from it; the great bulk of the work in preparing for schools is done in these months of "idleness."

Magdalen Tower and Bridge, Oxford

High Street, Oxford

The student will supplement his reading and tutorials by attending lectures. He will probably not attend many, although the tutor will suggest a few for him. There is no requirement for him to attend any, and if he feels that he can use his time better by reading, he will do that. On the whole, the lecturers presuppose a good knowledge of the period on the part of the student; they deal with detail, indicate further reading, and advance the ideas that they have come to through their own research. Unlike many American lecturers, they do not aim at giving the student a nice crib-sheet for the examination papers. Oxford students are expected to be above that level.

This leads into a very important point in the Oxford approach to students. They are expected to take care of themselves. The average freshman entering Oxford is older and more mature than his American counterpart. His seriousness and dedication are self-sufficient; thrown into the tangle of university life, he is expected to fend for himself. He is not oriented, guided, counseled, or indoctrinated (whatever the current academic jargon for this process in the United States is). He strikes out for himself and does an amazingly good job of it. If he cannot fend for himself, he learns to do so or is sent down. In this sense, Oxford students are tough; they are not, however, unfriendly. Many Americans coming up to Oxford feel that the British are unfriendly. They cling to their own nationals, preserving little islands of America in this vast wilderness of British Oxford. In effect, they rigidly refuse to accept another way of academic life, especially for the first term or so. Of the Americans at Oxford, the Rhodes Scholars as a group seem to make the best adjustment. This is due no doubt to the cosmopolitan nature of the scholarship and the wise policy of the Warden of Rhodes House, Brigadier E. T. Williams, who impresses every Rhodes Scholar with this facet of the scholarship by bringing the scholars together in international rather than national groups. Every Rhodes Scholar realizes sooner or later the challenge of living with a new way of life, of testing the validity of the assumptions he makes about his own way of life by taking part in another. And when he does this, he realizes that the English students are not unfriendly. He learns that reserve is not hostility and that formality is not suspicion. When he comes to understand the great English tradition of tea time, he has learned a great deal about the English and their way of life.

It would not be fair to conclude this brief survey of first reactions to Oxford without a word about sport, for sport is an integral part of every college at Oxford. Sports, like studies, are pursued seriously. When an American takes an interest in sports here, he is warmly received. The college teams are run and coached by undergraduates, and their standard of performance is high. Without vast coaching staffs, they attain a high standard of performance and they reach a standard in athletics that is not always understood in the United States, for they play a game as a game, not as a war. What matters is the standard of play first, the result second. We may think that such an attitude prevails in the United States, but I wonder if it does. I remember many acquaintances at Bowdoin seriously imagining that the College was losing its standard as an institution because its football team was losing games. This is an attitude that would not be understood here. This fact was brought home to me very clearly the other day. After playing in my first rugby match, which St. John's lost 5-0, I remarked to the secretary of the rugby football club that it was too bad we had lost. His reply was that it did not really matter, for the team had played hard, tough rugby; "the team is maintained not by winning but by playing rugby as well as it can." Rugby, incidentally, is a fast, rugged game that is equally as exciting as and far more strenuous than its American counterpart. It is a pity that it is not more widely played in the United States.

In my second article, I will compare the standards of Oxford education with what I take to be the standard in the United States, for there is much to be learned by both in such a comparison. If the American student here does not make constant comparisons with his past experience, he is missing a great opportunity. The chance to gain perspective on one's own country should not be overlooked by the visitor and actually seldom is.

My first reactions to Oxford are very favorable; they suggest comparisons with American ways, and the American ways do not always come out on top. Life at Oxford enables one to assess the United States as well as England.

THE SUN ON THE SEAL

A New Interpretation

by Gerard J. Brault
Instructor in French

The campus legend concerning the origin of the college seal is given official endorsement in the Sesquicentennial edition of the General Catalogue (1950): "It represents the rising sun, appropriate because, at the time of its adoption, Bowdoin was the easternmost college in the country." This was the explanation given by Louis C. Hatch '95 in The History of Bowdoin College (1927):

A college like other corporations must have a seal and the design should, if possible, be specially appropriate. When Bowdoin was founded it was the most eastern college in the country and accordingly a full sun, doubtless supposed to be a rising one, encircled by the inscription, Bowdoin Collegii Sigillum 1794, was chosen as a design for the seal.

The founders of most early American colleges were usually very careful to specify exactly what the seal they chose was intended to symbolize. Persistent research, however, has failed to uncover any early statement explaining the meaning of the sun on the seal of Bowdoin College.

WHAT THE CHARTER SAYS

The college charter, granted by an act of the Massachusetts General Court passed on June 24, 1794, mentions two seals.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said Corporation [of the President and the Trustees of Bowdoin College] may have one common seal, which they may change, break or renew at their pleasure; and that all deeds signed and delivered by the Treasurer, and sealed with their seal, by order of the President and Trustees, shall, when made in their corporate name, be considered in Law as deeds of the said Corporation;

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the Members of said Corporation of Overseers may have one common seal, which they may change, break and renew at their pleasure. . .

A letter preserved in the college archives from the Reverend Alden Bradford of Wiscasset to the Reverend Samuel Deane of Portland, who was later to become the first Vice-President of the College, bears witness to the fact that certain members of the Board of Overseers became interested in the matter of a seal at a very early date. I reproduce it here for the first time:

Wiscasset, June 11th, 1795

Reverend and Dear Sir,

I now send you the device for the seal, which you desired me to give Mr. Little. I forgot to put it in the letter which I gave Mr. Davis. I also send by the Bearer of this message Sermons delivered at Cambridge last Winter. I wish you to give Reverend Mr. Brown one Pamphlet.

A. BRADFORD

Unfortunately, the device for the seal, presumably a sketch of some sort, is missing. At the semi-annual meeting of the Board of Overseers held at Brunswick on May 16 and 17, 1798, the minutes record that the Board voted that:

The consideration of the report of the committee respecting a device for a seal for this board be deferred till the next meeting of the board.

The next meeting was held at the Columbian Hall in Portland on November 14, but again:

Voted: that the matter respecting the seal for the board of overseers be referred to the next meeting of the overseers.

That meeting was held at Freeport on May 15 and 16, 1799. Here is what transpired according to the minutes:

Upon motion, voted that this board now proceed to the consideration of the subject of procuring a seal for the same. After some debate, voted that the matter respecting said seal subside for this meeting.

At subsequent meetings, however, the Board became engrossed in the more urgent matters of selecting a President for the infant institution and of erecting the first college building, for the minutes are silent on this question.

In the meantime, however, the Board of Trustees had ordered a seal for its own use, as recorded by the following communication: "February 7, 1798 — paid Mr. Callender for a Seal — 15 Dollars equal to 4 pounds, 10 shillings." Joseph Callender (1751-1821) was a well-known engraver in Boston who specialized in cutting seals and bookplates. He had studied with Paul Revere and was employed by the Massachusetts Mint as a die-sinker. There is little doubt that this is the same seal mentioned in connection with President McKeen's installation in 1802. An account of this ceremony published in Jenk's Portland Gazette on September 6, 1802, relates that the President was invested with the symbols of his office among which figured the college seal. The diploma in Moses Quinby's name now on display in the Alumni Reading Room in Hubbard Hall proves that, in 1806, the college seal was exactly what it is today. Some time ago, Mr. McIntire, Bursar and Assistant Treasurer, searching through some old documents preserved in the basement vault in Massachusetts Hall, discovered what appears to be the original college seal. A nick over the sun's eye on this matrix reappears on certain early examples of the college seal.

WHAT THE SEAL MAY MEAN

Considering the seriousness with which the Board of Overseers debated the matter of a seal and, above all, remembering that six of the eleven original Trustees were staunch Protestant ministers — bearing in mind, also, that the first President and Vice-President of the College were Congregational ministers — it seems unlikely that a sun device would have been hit upon for so banal a reason as has been adduced. The fact that Bowdoin was the eastern-most college in the country in 1794 is, after all, a mere geographical curiosity. The sun on the seal was surely intended to symbolize something more spiritual and, therefore, more appropriate for a college dedicated to the promotion of "virtue and piety."

In 1904, the Quill published an anonymous poem entitled "Bowdoin Collegii Sigillum." The alumnus '98 who wrote this effective bit of verse suggested a spiritual interpretation which is well worth citing in full here:

Though Time's hard hand obliterate
The mark from parchment, wax or plate,
Yet Bowdoin's sons will still reveal
The true imprint of Bowdoin's seal.

The Sun is emblem of her truth
Which lights the countenance of her youth
And so, as symbol of that plan,
Her seal shows Truth with face of Man.

THE SUN SYMBOLIZES DIVINE WISDOM

In the absence of any documentary evidence, the interpretation of what the founders of Bowdoin had in mind should, as a matter of fact, be based upon the explanations given by the men who incorporated the same sun device into the official seals of Brown, Columbia, Georgia, William and Mary, and Bowdoin's two sister colleges, Amherst and Williams. In each case, the sun is associated with Wisdom, the fountainhead of all Learning. This interpretation is also the one that is given to the words Lux or Lumen (Light) inscribed on the seals of Columbia, North Carolina, and Yale.

But Wisdom in a special sense. Here the seal of Amherst College is most helpful, for it shows a sun in its glory — and, incidentally, the Bowdoin sun is not a rising one, but should properly be termed a sun in its glory or in its splendor — over a Bible. Remembering that the seals of Princeton and Yale also show a Bible, we realize now that the sun symbolizes Divine Wisdom as revealed in the Scriptures.

There are numerous passages in the Old and New Testament where God or Christ is alluded to in these terms. To name but three examples: Psalms, 84:11, "For the Lord God is a sun and a shield." John, 1:5, "God is Light." John, 8:12, "I am the Light of the world."

There can be no doubt for anyone familiar with Bowdoin's early years that its founders profoundly believed that Revelation was the ultimate source of all wisdom. We may safely conclude that the Boards wished to impress this fact and not the other upon the minds of their young charges. A contemporary bookplate dated 1799, designed for an early literary society at Dartmouth College, the Social Friends, bears a sun device which is strikingly similar to that on the Bowdoin seal. The Latin motto on this bookplate is the best clue to the meaning of the sun on the seal of Bowdoin College. It reads: "Sol Sapientiae nunquam occidet" (the Sun of Wisdom never sets).

This seal was for a time the official seal of the College. It was designed in 1898 by Alger V. Currier, an instructor in drawing at Bowdoin. Retaining the sun as the emblem, he depicted a modified reproduction of a head of Helios found at Ilium. The symbolism of the sun was extended by presenting rays to typify the effulgence of the College and blood spots to indicate fullness of learning.

The new seal was adopted by the Governing Boards in 1898, and the Committee on Arts interests was instructed to have a new die prepared and to destroy the old. Alumni and undergraduates alike protested. The Orient said of the old seal, "The fact that its dear, stupid, and round old face smiled from the sheepskins of Bowdoin's great men and small men seemed to imprint upon the hearts of all a feeling akin to love." Alumni in general and the Washington Alumni Association in particular became aroused and initiated two referenda on the question. As a result the action of the Boards was suspended and the old seal retained.

No diploma ever carried the so-called Currier design, but it did appear in a few college publications of 1898 and 1899.

ADAM'S LAST SEASON

by Dick Doyle '40

"Hello, young coaches, wherever you are. I hope your troubles are few . . . I was a success like you . . . I know how it feels to have wings on my heels and fly down the street on a cloud . . . Be brave, young coaches, and follow your star (but make sure that you enroll a constellation)."

We don't have to put words into Adam Walsh's mouth. For the better part of a quarter of a century that eloquent gentleman-coach has given us ringing phrases to play and live by. Still, may we submit the above in a spirit we regard as part Hammerstein, part Polonius, and all Adam?

This is neither a history nor a landscape painting, either scope of which would be necessary to capture the career of this bringer of fame "by deeds well done."

Just a few personal sketches —

"Remember, my teams play to win, not tie" (in the dressing room after conservative tactics had preserved a deadlock and not chanced a win, with his third straight State Series title all wrapped up).

"You're not out there to win for me because you think I'm a good guy and can use the salary. You want to hit the fellow across the line because of pride in yourself, love of contact, love of the college" (from a between-halves talk).

"The end of the free substitution rule will wreak a hardship on small college football teams" (this after he'd directed Bowdoin to its fifth outright championship in his regime).

"Three points should be awarded for a conversion by rushing, two points by passing, one point by kicking" (this several years before the addition of a two-point option by pass or kick for this past season).

Other memories —

Adam's lean figure pacing the sidelines, chain-smoking, scanning the play, instructing a reserve, looking every inch the commander.

A pat on the back to the off-trotting Polar Bear who'd played his part well, soothing comfort to the lad who might be punishing himself for an error of commission, gracious assistance to his feet for a respected opponent who happened to fall near the bench.

That still supple frame hovering over a football on the practice field and centering it back with a snap and precision his own pivots never could surpass and seldom equal; sprinting downfield under punts abreast of his speedy ends.

The sheer inspiration of his voice.

Whittier Field in all its sylvan glory won't be quite the same. Yet, that gem of a sporting scene will always owe some of its sparkle to the vision of Adam Walsh.

He steered us out of the gale some 23 years ago, and a happy course we followed. But nobody can blame the latest storm on the pilot. Analogous to war weapons agreements, he wasn't permitted to follow certain charts that, in days of yore, led to the doors of good football players.

Through 1952 Bowdoin teams under Adam had compiled the handsome record of 63 victories, 34 defeats, and 8 ties.

Disasters since reduced it to a final 65-65-9, still an even break.

A mark to shoot at, but probably beyond the range of any successor: titles his first three seasons, then three straight championship ties, one miss and another outright crown; three ties and an outright title in first six years of postwar coaching.

We say this Bowdoin coaching record is virtually unbreakable for various reasons, including the growth of the University of Maine with its material-alluring physical education course, the upgrading of Bates and Colby resources.

Adam Walsh leaves Bowdoin — departs in body but never in spirit — as he came, sportsman to the core, a great influence on and far beyond the campus.

The 1958 season repeated troubles of recent years, but here and there the light broke through. A rebuilt line and continued shortage of backfield speed again had Bowdoin outmanned in every contest. White was still able to battle even for stretches of play, only to have foes press breaks and run it up.

Captain Gene Waters' unflagging leadership in the face of usually steep odds was one of the saving graces.

Alumni-spurred effort to corral requisite student-athlete material started to crystalize with a better freshman team — though on the basis of a loss to an M.C.I. team that was decisively beaten by Colby and Maine frosh, we have a long way to go. Three good freshman teams in a row are needed to get Bowdoin off the mark.

Game by game:

Tufts 26, Bowdoin 6 — Another Tufts powerhouse. Bowdoin had its moments in the rain. Seasonal pattern set at Whittier: air lanes offered principal hope with Polar Bears unable to negotiate ground traffic consistently. Jumbo Mark Lydon busted loose early on 99-yard scoring gallop. Dick Levine, Matt's brother, passed to Feingold for extra two points. Soph Jack Cummings gave Bowdoin stands a thrill, however, by returning the kickoff 85 yards to tally, helped by Charlie Finlayson's block. Point pass failed and it was 8-6. Exchange of fumbles set Tufts on Bowdoin 13 in second period and Jumbos scored in four plays, mostly and finally Lydon for a yard. Interception on Bowdoin 24 a little later and a fourth down pass, Levine to Cahill, boosted count to 20-6 at halftime. Dave Fox cut back 25 yards capping a 92-yard Tufts drive in third quarter for final score. Jack Condon's passes sparked moderate Bowdoin penetrations thereafter. White ends Al Merritt, Finlayson, Jim Carnathan, guards Joe Carven and Don Prince starred in line.

Wesleyan 32, Bowdoin 8 — Three Cardinal touchdowns settled issue in first 12 minutes at Middletown. White made greatest air-ground progress of season for nearly even statistical break, but miscues and poor tackling really hurt. Wesleyan opened with 68-yard surge. Squatrito smashed final four after an earlier 28. Kickoff hit Bowdoin lineman at midfield, was recovered by Cardinals on their 46. Huddleston dashed 37 and Leverich-Huddleston-back-to-Leverich exchange scored from the 4. Passing, aided by interference, sprang Wesleyan half of a 40-yard span climaxed by Squatrito's 8-yard TD. Wesleyan also scored in third quarter on Huddleston-Ahrens pass and Thomas' 17-yard run ending 77-yard advance. A 68-yard Bowdoin drive foundered on the 4 but White averted shutout in fourth period. George Del Prete covered Cardinal bobble on W-4 and Waters bucked over three plays later. Bob Hawkes rushed the conversion. Cummings led Bowdoin carriers, spearheaded thrusts to Wesleyan 31 and 14.

Many of the best years of my life have been devoted to Bowdoin College. The welfare of the College, as well as the welfare of the fine young men it has been my privilege to have been entrusted with, I have always tried to place above self benefit. This fine and friendly association with Bowdoin College has been, and will continue to be, of great value to me as well as my family. For this we are indeed grateful.

On numerous occasions I have publicly stated, in all sincerity, that I would voluntarily and gladly resign from my position when I thought it would be of benefit to Bowdoin. Deep down in my heart, President Coles, I feel that time has now arrived. Therefore, I wish to urge you and the Governing Boards to accept my resignation as Coach of Football, to become effective at the end of the calendar year.

Amherst 34, Bowdoin 0 — Not as bad as last year for scant consolation. Bowdoin showed some technical improvement. Lord Jeffs marched 77 yards for early score. Jack Close was prime mover and Deligeorges hit over from the 3. Close-to-Shields added two points. Jeffs went 56 yards in second period, Leach-to-Shields setting up score from 3. Amherst foiled Bowdoin fourth down gamble on White 38 in third period. Close threw to Shields for 20 and third TD. Interception on B-44 started Jeffs goalward again. Amherst passed most of way and McLean rushed last yard. Bowdoin fumble on its 5 gave Jeffs an easy fifth touchdown, scored by Paulson. Bowdoin never got beyond Amherst's 25. Thwarted on the ground, liberal Bowdoin passing followed law of diminishing returns as surprise element vanished. Carven, Dave Cole, Rick Hurl, Prince, Del Prete featured a better line.

Williams 46, Bowdoin 28 — White's highest score in years triggered by early lead. But alas, Ephs were too much and many despite campus confinement of three stars. White opened with two-play TD after short Williams kick. Condon passed to Finlayson for 26 and Waters swept final 10. Conversion pass failed. Ephs scored thrice in second period against White thrusts to Williams 24 and 20. Higgins passed to Rorke and then Smith for TD and Listerman placement made it 7-6. Ide, Hatcher and Eric Widmer chewed up 80 yards among them and Ide scored from 2 on 17th play. Rorke rushed for two more points. Hatcher blocked Condon fourth down pass and raced 30 to score. Bowdoin then made good on pass gamble, Condon to Hawkes, for 25-yard TD and Hawkes rushed for 21-14 halftime count. Ide scooted 28 and Hatcher 70 yards for third period scores. Bowdoin closed to 36-28 on Condon-Cummings-Hawkes flea-flicker and Terry Sheehan plunge, but Ephs countered via Rorke's tote for 51 and a Briggs-Walker pass.

Colby 44, Bowdoin 12 — Highest tally run up by Mules on Bowdoin in 44 years, fifth straight loss to Colby. Eventual champs quickly cashed breaks forced by relentless defensive pressure. Passing (224 yards) only Bowdoin recourse. Farren opened scoring with 3-yarder after short White punt. Brown-to-Roden made it 8-0. Bowdoin promptly rebounded on Condon passes to Hawkes for 42 and 36 to score but point pass failed. Cummings' fumble of fair catch set up Mules late in half. Farren went 26 in two plays to score, and Rogan-Roden upped it to 16-6. Fifty-five seconds later Connors ran an interception 45 yards for marker and Rogan rushed point. Another painful fumble yielded ball on Colby 38 late in third period. Farren dominated scoring drive, Brown-Cavari converted. Still another fumble stumped Bowdoin's passing advance to Mule 25 and Rogan-Burke 67-yard pass made it 38-6 at three-quarters. Mule reserves followed up Bowdoin gamble with Williams scoring in fourth quarter. White drove 72 yards to wind it up. Entin passes to Bill Widmer and Dick Seavey, Waters' running, and pass interference set up Seavey plunge. Colby was on B-3 at finish.

Bowdoin 14, Bates 14 — Boys just missed victory present for Adam two days after he resigned. Deadlock was near equivalent. Well of Bowdoin spirit proved far from dry. Hawkes, ranking with Bowdoin's better backs over the years, keyed rally from 14-0 down. Cats marched 61 yards after stopping Bowdoin on downs in first period. Makowsky led and completed trek, scored from 1. Heidel-Wylie made it 8-0. Keenan interception return of 38 yards staged Cats later in period on B-17. Heidel-Vana pass scored, but Seavey made vital stop of Vana's point rush bid. Bears struck quickly through air in third period after checking Garnet on B-19. Condon-Hawkes screen pass gained 33 and same combo spanned the balance. Hawkes rushed conversion. Bears were stopped on Bates 2 after Merritt's fumble recovery on 10, but short kick gave White a shot at the tie it didn't miss from 21. Hawkes made it on one wide swipe. Bob never had a chance — stopped in his tracks behind line — on point rush that meant victory.

Maine 37, Bowdoin 0 — Another chapter in old story. Mighty Maine, state's deepest and probably strongest squad despite upset by Colby, posted sixth straight easy win in what used to be hot series. So superior was Maine that Bowdoin couldn't even pass for much yardage. Nor could White cash any of seven fumble recoveries, some deep in Maine territory. Highlight of day was President Coles' presentation of colored print of campus of 51 years ago to Adam before game. Mr. Football responded by asking 8,000 fans to pay homage to boys of all four Maine colleges who didn't return from World War II. Maine scored on White's early 71-yard punt runback, Dore's punt block and run with the recovery in the first half, Theriault ending a 63-yard journey, Bragg running 77, and a 94-yard mostly aerial drive featuring Pickett-Theriault passes in second half. Bowdoin got to Maine 23, to the 14, and to the 4 with Hawkes, Sheehan and Waters running well, but Polar Bears were piled up by rugged Black Bear defense.

You're Adam Walsh . . .

You're Adam Walsh and this is your farewell to Maine college football.

The final taste of a tough cut and for your going away, it's Bowdoin and the University of Maine.

You'll be 57 years old December 4. It has been an exciting life, this football life of yours.

The one small part of the record, the part you still cherish and tenderly nurse, began in 1924. That was the year you captained the most famous football team of all, Rockne's Seven Mules and the Four Horsemen.

This is your countdown, your farewell:

12:30 P.M. It's 60 minutes to kickoff. Your memories are like infant nuggets of gold today. Out there some place is Rock, your idol. He's saying "Come on now, boy, go out there with your chin up, you dumb Irishman!" You laugh ever so softly, because you know Rock once said you were the football center of your day, the player with the most desire. Those words didn't mean much then. Today they're tiny chunks of gold, whittled from your mine of 34 years in this business.

1 P.M. Crowd's coming in and they're in a happy, gay mood. Football has been good to you, and for a fact, you know you've been good for football. It's a game for hard-nosed guys. Remember the afternoon you played sixty minutes against Army with two broken hands? Oh, how those aches and pains screamed. You'll never forget that afternoon because football's history books have it down in black and white. It's funny what comes into your mind on your farewell.

1:25 P.M. You tell your kids to hang in there all the way. Don't give an inch. You tell 'em they're fortunate to be privileged to play this game of football, your game. You tell 'em you were fortunate to be associated with such a splendid lot of boys — and you mean it.

1:30 P.M. Yes, you answer President Coles, the long marriage at Bowdoin was a pleasant association. Your booming, cocksure voice carries a stilling message through the grandstands and into the distant piney fringe areas. You feel you've done something for Bowdoin football, and you say it for all to hear. Then you ask the crowd never for one moment to forget the gone guys who helped make Maine college football what it is. The late Andy Haldane . . . Eddie Barrows . . . Roger Stearns . . . Bob LaFleur. You don't name these guys, yet, they and many others light your mind of memories. It's time for the kickoff.

1:37 P.M. The game's on now and 34 years pass before your eyes. Your lovable, always cheering Mom back in Hollywood, Cal. She wouldn't come east to live because she loved the west . . . Notre Dame . . . Ol' Rock . . . The Horsemen (we Mules made those guys famous!) . . . Cleveland . . . Los Angeles . . . Santa Clara . . . Harvard . . . Yale . . . Bowdoin . . . the day, four years ago, when you stood all alone at South Bend and heard 59,000 homecoming fans thunder a standing ovation when announcer Joe Boland said: "And the captain of the etc., etc., . . . Adam Walsh!" . . . You can still feel the twinges at your heartstrings.

2:27 P.M. It's halftime and your kids are down, 16-0. What can you tell 'em? You know you're lucky to be so close. You can't tell your kids, Maine's lads are simply that much better.

Your chin goes out and you pray and hope for the best.

3:22 P.M. You're 37 points down. When you're 37 down, in any language, you've been horse-whipped. A winless season ends your days at Bowdoin. You're sick, inside, not for yourself so much, for your seniors who've taken this week-after-week lashing. You know it isn't your fault. You know it isn't the fault of the boys you have available. You know for a fact Bowdoin can never win again unless steps are taken to get more talent in uniform. You promised yourself and your family never to complain, yet when your kids are showered and the bruises blossom, it's hard to remain silent.

3:30 P.M. You're second-guessing yourself, now? When you won the world pro championship, you nearly decided on staying at Los Angeles, or the West Coast. You didn't care about money then; you wanted the smell of Bowdoin's pines, hours down at the fire-barn with the boys in Brunswick. Your critics have said your "stuff" has gone by, your football. Yet, only a few nights ago, you had a long distance telephone call from one of football's ablest coaches, asking your advice on a certain phase of technique involving a defensive change. Remember, now, you promised never to second guess yourself . . .

3:43 P.M. It's over, 37-0. It is 31 steps from your bench to the spot at midfield, where you've gone so many times to shake hands with the opposition coach. Hal Westerman happens to be one of your favorite coaches. Today, though, you find it hard doing those 31 to meet him. You do it though and turn for your locker. The 31-plus and into the tunnel beneath the grandstand are terribly difficult ones. People stop to shake your hand, others shout encouragement, women grab your hand, wish you well and pull you closer for a hug and a kiss. You're embarrassed, but somehow, the love and affection mean something these final minutes.

3:48 P.M. You tell your kids: "Awright, chins up . . . no tears . . . no shame. You have nothing to feel down about. Come on now, smile . . ." You can't smile yourself, but the kids, they should, you hope.

4 P.M. You're on your way home now to sit by the fire with Mrs. Walsh, your family, and a few close friends. You're proud and, because you lost, you're hurt.

You're Adam Walsh and this was your farewell to football.

Glimpses of

On The Campus

The late John E. Priestly of Topsham would have been proud to see the first presentation of the Priestly Scholarship at the College. It went on November 13 to his son Bob, a freshman.

The Priestly Scholarship, which will be awarded each year, has been established by Sigma Nu fraternity in honor and memory of Jack Priestly, a member of the maintenance staff of the College at the time of his death last April 30.

Mr. Priestly had a lifelong interest in athletics. While living in Fall River, Mass., he was a member of the Raffies, winners of the National Amateur soccer championship in 1930. He and his family moved in 1936 to Topsham, where he was influential in the formation of a recreation program and also devoted countless hours to organizing and coaching school and recreational sports teams.

He organized a basketball program on the grammar school level, starting in the seventh and eighth grades and gradually working down to the third and fourth grades. Every year he coached at least one team. When the girls in town wanted a team, he provided the coaching for them too.

After the basketball program was going well, Jack Priestly turned his time and attention to baseball. He organized teams in the schools and summer teams after the school year was over.

Bob Priestly, who was graduated from Brunswick High School in June, less than two months after his father's death, is one product of this devotion to the welfare of young people. In high school he played basketball and baseball for four years and football for two years. He entered Bowdoin in September as the recipient of an Alumni Fund scholarship and is a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity.

It's Official Now

Six and one-half years after he ran the 100 yard dash in 9.8 seconds, former track star Gordie Milliken '53 received official credit for tying a Bowdoin record first set nearly sixty years ago.

On the afternoon of May 4, 1952, Bowdoin scored 67 points in a triangular meet at Springfield, Mass., to defeat Springfield College with 40 1/6 points and the University of Connecticut with 27 5/6. Milliken and his classmate Dick Getchell were the high scorers with 18 and 15 points respectively. Milliken won the 100 in 9.8, the 440 in 52.3, and the broad jump with a leap of 21' 9 3/4" and took a second in the 220. Getchell won the 120 yard high hurdles, the 220 yard low hurdles, and the 220 yard dash.

Following the meet the Polar Bears had to leave in a hurry for a previously scheduled meal. Springfield's Coach Judd agreed to get the referee's ruling on Milliken's record and get in touch with Jack Magee, then coaching Bowdoin. For one reason or another, no word was ever heard from him and he retired the next year, in 1953. Vernon Cox, Springfield's new coach, in checking the files and the records, noticed that Milliken's mark equalled the Pratt Field record for the 100.

From there on it was simply a matter of cutting all of the official red tape at Bowdoin and Springfield — getting the okay of the meet referee, Coach Judd, Coach Cox, Jack Magee, and Bowdoin's Director of Athletics, Mal Morrell.

So now Gordie Milliken, who was graduated five years ago, officially shares the College's 100 yard dash record of 9.8 seconds with Harry Cloudman '01, who set the original record in 1899, and with Howard Mostrom '28, who tied the record in his senior year.

Milliken has been in the Air Force since 1954 and was last reported stationed at Craig Air Force Base in Alabama. A first lieutenant, he was the instructor with a student flier in a jet trainer which crashed near Selma, Ala., on April 3, 1957. Both men walked away from the wreckage only slightly injured. The plane suddenly flamed out during a turn on a landing approach.

Twenty in a Row

Eight Bowdoin debaters chalked up a record of 18 victories in 20 matches at the University of Vermont Debate Tournament in Burlington on November 21 and 22, the best team record in the 13-year history of the event.

This achievement was excelled only by the individual performance of Alfred E. Schretter '59 of Florham Park, N. J., who by winning five straight debates brought his own personal string to 20 victories and no defeats over four years.

Schretter and Peter S. Smith '60 of Durham, N. H., defeated Dartmouth, Morgan State, Holy Cross, New Haven Teachers, and Hofstra. In addition, two other Bowdoin teams were undefeated. Frank C. Mahncke '60 of Morristown, N. J., and Herman B. Segal '61 of Portland won out over Wesleyan, Penn State, Rutgers, Toronto, and East Nazarene, and the freshman pair of Alan R. Baker of Great Neck, N. Y., and James S. Rice of Short Hills, N. J., defeated Amherst, Norwich, Brooklyn, Hamilton, and the University of New Hampshire.

The fourth Bowdoin team, composed of Stephen W. Silverman '61 of Dover, N. H., and P. Kent Spriggs '61 of Kensington, Md., won victories over Brandeis, St. John's Fisher, and Rensselaer Polytechnic and lost to Rhode Island and St. Michael's.

With its 18 and 2 mark Bowdoin placed first among the 44 colleges and universities in the tournament. Tied for second were Dartmouth, Bates, and Wesleyan, all with records of 15 wins and 5 defeats. Bowdoin, coached by Professor Albert R. Thayer '22, had three of the eight two-man teams which had 5-0 records. No other college had more than one.

Bowdoin also had the top record at the Vermont tournament a year ago, with a mark of 16 wins out of 20 debates.

Schretter, a graduate of Keene (N.H.) High School, entered Bowdoin as the recipient of an Alumni Fund scholarship. He won a plaque last March as the best individual speaker among the 250 who took part in the Brooklyn College tournament. At Bowdoin he has won first place in both the Achorn and Bradbury prize debates and is a James Bowdoin Scholar.

The fall debating season got under way on November 5, when four men traveled to New Hampshire to put on an exhibition debate at Phillips Exeter Academy. On the 16th Bowdoin took part in the annual State of Maine tournament, held at Orono.

Prospects for the year are bright, according to Professor Thayer. Several good candidates in the freshman class plus the return of all varsity debaters from a year ago provide the squad with unusual strength. An ambitious schedule has been arranged, including tournaments at M.I.T., Dartmouth, Boston University, Trinity, Brooklyn, and Tufts, as well as several practice and exhibition debates.

Alumni who wish to hear Bowdoin debate teams in action should write to the Debate Council, 116 Sills Hall, for information as to exact dates and times.

These Thirty Should Help

Thirty members of the freshman football team, which compiled the best yearling mark in some years, were awarded their class numerals in November.

Coached by Ed Coombs and Bob Donham, the freshmen defeated Hebron Academy 58 to 0 and Phillips Exeter Academy 26 to 7, tied Phillips Andover 14 to 14, and lost to Maine Central Institute 22 to 8.

The freshmen should contribute heavily to the 1959 varsity team, with strength available in all positions. Ends John Adams, Dave Barron, Jim Bean, Dexter Bucklin, Jim Fleming, and Skip Magee will provide depth behind varsity lettermen Bill Widmer and Charlie Finlayson, both of whom are sophomores. Barron at 6 feet and 187 pounds is the tallest and heaviest of the five.

Five freshman tackles should help considerably next fall. John Tolan weighs 225, Craig Cleaves 200, Spencer Hunt 220, Howard Hall 220, and Tom Hollmann 180. They will join sophomore lettermen Bert Needham, Dave Cole, and Gerry Haviland.

Six freshman guards should also be of assistance another year. They are Joe Augustini at 180 pounds, Bill Cunningham at 175, Mike Farmer at 195, Charlie Speleotis at 187, Pete Hepburn at 190, and Frank DiGirolamo at 168. They will join four varsity lettermen — Joe Carven and Bob Hohlfelder, both juniors, and George Del Prete and Don Prince, both sophomores.

Junior center Carl Smith will get a lot of competition next fall from two members of the freshman squad. They are Dave Fernald and Jim Garland, the former at 200 pounds and the latter at 195.

Some of the eleven freshman backs who won numerals will also be a big help in 1959, along with Ted Gardner of Sanford, who transferred to Bowdoin this year from Notre Dame as a sophomore. Junior quarterbacks Jack Condon and George Entin will be joined by freshmen Tom Behan and Dexter Morse.

In addition, six halfbacks will be available. They are Pete Field, Jackie Robarts, Dave Shea, Bill Luke, Pete Mone, and Newt Stowell. Dan Alvino, Gerry Francoeur, and Mike Panteleakos will provide depth at fullback. They will join halfbacks Bob Hawkes, Jack Cummings, and Dick Seavey, and fullback Terry Sheehan, all of whom won letters this past season. Cummings and Seavey are sophomores, and Sheehan and Hawkes are juniors.

A New Song Book

On Saturday, November 8, the first copy of the new Songs of Bowdoin was presented to Professor Frederic E. T. Tiltonson H'46, at the annual Alumni Day luncheon. Frank C. Whittelsey '58 and James S. Croft '58 worked for more than a year to compile this tribute to "Tilly," to whom the presentation came as a complete surprise.

The 44-page book has a large nine-by-twelve format, is bound in heavy gray paper, and contains all of the standard Bowdoin songs as well as a few more that are less well known. In addition, each of the twelve fraternities on campus is represented by one of its own songs. The book also contains three black and white photographs, one of Professor Tiltonson, the second of the Chapel, and the third a view of the granite Polar Bear in front of the Gymnasium.

Donovan D. Lancaster '27, Manager of the Moulton Union, was instrumental in getting the book published. Professors Herbert R. Brown, Robert K. Beckwith, and Edwin B. Benjamin '37 also provided helpful assistance.

The initial press run of two thousand copies is beginning to disappear, but provision has been made for reprinting the book if the demand warrants it.

Copies are available at the Moulton Union Bookstore. The price per copy is $1.25 plus four cents tax for each song book shipped within the State of Maine, and a charge of nine cents for handling and postage.

Moms Join Dads

Nearly two hundred Bowdoin mothers joined their husbands for the festivities on Father's Day, Saturday, October 18. This was the first time that a full schedule of events had been planned for mothers, and the innovation was an emphatic success.

Between 8 and 10 Saturday morning parents visited classes and toured the campus with their sons and other guides.

At a special chapel service at 10:10 they listened to Dr. Robert Cummins of Bowdoinham, former general superintendent of the Universalist Church of America and the father of three Bowdoin sons. Dr. Cummins, speaking directly to the undergraduates, said, "What you have is yours, and for that you are responsible to do with not as you wish but as you ought. . . . The great challenge to your generation, as I see it, is to find the new moralities which will express your sense of values — duties peculiarly your own."

"The scientific problem of social adjustment, for example, is far more important to your generation than any further mechanical progress. We could manage to get along with the machinery already invented; we cannot with our social life. There is, in fact, not a single field of human relations in which there do not need to be developed finer adjustments. The danger today is not the law-breaker, not even the criminal who constitutes so serious a menace. It is those who keep within the letter of the law and employ clever attorneys to enable them to do what they want and get by with it. Try that one on your dads sometime."

While the Bowdoin Fathers' Association held its thirteenth annual meeting in the Library and listened to Librarian Kenneth J. Boyer, the Society of Bowdoin Women entertained the mothers at coffee in the Moulton Union.

Members of the Association and their wives were guests of the College at luncheon in the Sargent Gymnasium at noon. In the afternoon parents joined their sons at the varsity football game with Williams College.

Fifty Scholars Honored

"Only so long as we are true to the principle of the supremacy of law will we remain a nation of free men," Chief Justice Robert B. Williamson of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine stated at the James Bowdoin Day exercises on

Roland E. Clark
1879-1958

Roland Eugene Clark of the Class of 1901, Treasurer and a Trustee of the College since 1949 and trust consultant for the First Portland National Bank, died in Portland on November 1, 1958.

A native of Houlton, Mr. Clark served as a major during World War I and upon his discharge from the Army in 1919 became vice president in charge of the Trust Department of the Fidelity Trust Company in Portland. He held the same position with the National Bank of Commerce from 1933 until it merged earlier this year with the First Portland National Bank, when he became trust consultant.

A bankers' banker, he was active in the organization of the Corporate Fiduciaries Association of Maine in 1925 and served as its first president. Although he was genuinely humble, like his classmate the late Kenneth Sills, he felt honored and proud when in 1939 he became the first Maine man ever to be elected President of the Trust Division of the American Bankers Association.

Mr. Clark served Bowdoin in many ways, but always quietly and without fanfare. He was secretary of the Aroostook County Bowdoin Club from 1910 to 1913. He was president of the Portland Bowdoin Club in 1925-26. He was a director of the Alumni Fund from 1932 to 1935, and he served on the Alumni Council between 1925 and 1928. He was elected Chairman of the Fund in 1935 and President of the Alumni Council in 1928. In 1939 he was elected to the Board of Overseers and ten years later, in 1949, he replaced the late Philip Dana '96 as Treasurer.

In 1952 his grateful alma mater conferred upon Roland Clark an honorary master of arts degree. The citation read at that time said, in part, "... conscientious and meticulous officer of the College, carrying on the fine traditions of his important office with ability and loyalty."

At a memorial service held in the Chapel on November 10, President Coles paid tribute to him in these words — "Roland Clark was a complete gentleman. He never spoke an unkind word of any person, either directly or by inference or innuendo. And yet he was by no means indecisive. He was intelligent and firm in thought and decision, but completely just. Thoughtful, reliable, responsible, and thoroughly dependable, he was ever a loyal and devoted son of Bowdoin."

October 22, when fifty undergraduates were honored.

Justice Williamson spoke about "the deep hunger men have for a rule of law and the certain recognition that in a rule of law we walk the path of life in freedom and honor. Paradoxically, the more freedom we possess as individuals, the more we need the will of the people enacted into law to control us in our living with one another."

The undergraduate response at the convocation was delivered by G. Raymond Babineau '59 of Hempstead, N. Y. Ronald A. Miller '59 of Woodland was awarded the General Philoon Trophy as the senior with the best record at the summer camp of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. J. Skelton Williams jr. '59 of Richmond, Va., received the James Bowdoin Cup for having the highest scholastic average among undergraduates winning varsity letters.

Among the 50 men honored were 22 seniors, 18 juniors, and 10 sophomores.

Gifts and bequests to Bowdoin for the year ending June 30, 1958 — for endowment, current purposes, buildings, and other uses — aggregated $1,029,997, according to the annual financial reports of the College. During the preceding year gifts and bequests for similar college purposes, including grants from The Ford Foundation aggregating $367,500, amounted to $1,168,859.

As of June 30, 1958, Bowdoin's endowment funds totaled $14,393,994, a net increase during the year of $409,201. During the year sixteen new endowment funds were established, including a bequest of $276,000 for the Henry Johnson Professorship of Art and Archaeology. Several scholarship funds aggregating $53,000 were established or increased.

Major gifts enabling new building in accordance with the current Development Program included the gift of a new dormitory, Coleman Hall, by Mrs. Frederick W. Pickard of Greenville, Del. Gifts of Mrs. Sherman N. Shumway of Los Angeles, Calif., made possible an addition to and renovation of the Dudley Coe Memorial Infirmary. Both Coleman Hall and the enlarged infirmary facilities are in use this year.

Income from investments was at the rate of 3.78% on market value and 4.88% on book value. During the preceding year the returns were respectively 3.77% and 4.80%.

Danforth Fellows

Since 1951, when the Danforth Foundation in St. Louis inaugurated its program of Danforth Graduate Fellowships, 409 appointments of Danforth Fellows have been made. Four of these men are Bowdoin graduates. They are Lloyd O. Bishop '55, William F. Hoffmann '54, Chalmers MacCormick '52, and T. Ellis McKinney '54.

Bishop, who is doing graduate work in French, was a Fulbright Scholar at the University of Paris in 1955-56, studied at Harvard in 1956-57, was in military service in 1957-58, and is now at Columbia. In 1956 he received a master of arts degree from Middlebury College.

Hoffmann was a National Science Foundation Fellow in physics at Princeton in 1954-55. Since that time he has continued to do graduate work at Princeton, where he is also teaching this year.

MacCormick did graduate work in the history and philosophy of religion at Harvard during 1952-53 and received a master of arts degree in June of 1953. In 1953-54 he was a Fulbright Scholar at the University of Tübingen in Germany. For the next four years he did further graduate work at Harvard and is currently teaching at Wells College.

McKinney, following his graduation from Bowdoin in 1954, studied for three years at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, receiving a master of arts degree in 1955 and a master of arts in law and diplomacy degree in 1957. He was in military service in 1955 and is now a Fulbright Scholar at the University of Rangoon.

Danforth Fellows are young men preparing themselves through rigorous graduate study to be college teachers.

The Loss of a Friend

Mrs. Lola Orr, who had worked for the College for twenty-five years, twenty of them behind the counter in the Moulton Union, died at her home in Topsham on November 14. Only a few days before her death a Class Agent had written in his first Alumni Fund letter of the year — "I can assure you that walking through the pines to Whittier Field still holds the same thrill that it did in years past. Coffee is still 7 cents at the Union and is still served by the same girls — I was amazed that Lola remembered me at first glance."

Storer Gets Fulbright

Associate Professor of Economics James A. Storer has been awarded a Fulbright grant for 1959-60 and will leave next June for the University of the Philippines, where he will lecture in economics and international trade at the Institute of Economic Research and will help graduate students carry on their research. In addition, he will do research himself in the economic development of the Philippines.

Professor Storer, who joined the faculty in 1948, also spent the year 1951-52 in the Philippines under a Fulbright

Hoyt A. Moore

Hoyt Augustus Moore of the Class of 1895, Vice President of the Bowdoin Board of Trustees since 1948 and for many years general counsel for the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, died at the Lenox Hill Hospital in New York on Tuesday afternoon, November 18, 1958.

Mr. Moore was elected to the Board of Overseers in 1929 and to the Board of Trustees four years later, in 1933. In 1948 he was named Vice President of the Board, succeeding the late Judge John A. Peters of the Class of 1885. Both men, interestingly enough, were natives of Ellsworth.

Hoyt Moore was for many years chairman of the Visiting Committee of the Governing Boards, which has the responsibility for setting up the college budget. In addition to this time-consuming and exacting task, he served on many other committees and labored without stint to help Bowdoin in every way he could. In 1941 he gave Augustus E. Moore Hall, a sixty-four man dormitory, named in honor of his father and costing $125,000. He was a generous contributor to the Sesquicentennial Fund in the period from 1947 to 1953 and in June of 1954 established the Hoyt A. Moore Scholarship Fund. Gifts from Mr. and Mrs. Moore have brought the total to more than $75,000. Income from the fund is used for scholarships to "deserving Maine boys, preferably from Ellsworth and other places in Hancock County." This year five boys from that part of Maine are studying at Bowdoin as Moore Scholars.

President Coles conducted a memorial chapel service on November 19. "It was my misfortune," he said, "not to have known Hoyt Moore until six years ago. In that brief time, however, I came to know, admire, respect, and love him."

"His death marks, in a very real sense, the end of an era in the government of the College. One can only hope, as he would, that there are students here today who will some day be able to do as much."

Hoyt Moore gave generously of himself and of his talents in many fields of endeavor, but he was particularly generous toward Bowdoin, which he served without thought of himself or concern for himself, for all his life long he regarded the College as "the nurturer of men." And all his life long he remained keenly interested in all aspects of the process by which Bowdoin men are nurtured.

grant, teaching at the University of the Philippines and conducting research on the foreign trade of the Islands since 1898. He and Mrs. Storer will take their two young sons with them, leaving next June and returning in August of 1960.

Fall Dean's List

One hundred fourteen undergraduates are on the Dean's List during the current semester. Included are 41 seniors, 42 juniors, 30 sophomores, and one Bowdoin Plan student.

Dean's List honors are awarded to students who during their last semester have attained at least a "B-" average with not more than one grade below "B-" and no grade lower than "C" in their regular courses.

On Frenchman's Bay

The Oakes Center at Bar Harbor will once again be the location of a six-weeks' Speech Workshop for Teachers next summer. Professor Albert R. Thayer '22, who directed the first program earlier this year, will again be the director.

Twenty teachers or teachers-in-training will be chosen to study at the workshop between June 29 and August 7. They will live at The Oakes Center, which occupies the property formerly known as "The Willows." It was given to Bowdoin a year ago by Lady Eunice Oakes, whose husband, the late Sir Harry Oakes, Bart., was a member of the Class of 1896.

Two courses will be offered, each providing three semester hours of academic credit. One is "Speech Development, Normal and Abnormal," and the other is "Speech Research and Program Building."

Jaw-Bone Stick

A walking stick made from the jawbone of a whale has become part of the Arctic collection at Bowdoin. Carved by a sea captain during his last whaling voyage in 1891, this unusual memento is the gift of Mrs. Thomas W. Estabrook of Topsham in memory of her father, Leland B. Lane of the Class of 1881.

Bill Reardon '50 Honored

The first award of the William J. Reardon Memorial Football Trophy will be made sometime in December to a senior on the varsity football squad who has made "an outstanding contribution to his team and his college as a man of honor, courage, and ability." He must be held in respect on the campus as well as on the football field.

The Reardon Trophy honors a former Bowdoin football star, named to the All-Maine team in 1949, who died last April. A regulation-size silver football standing on a rubbed mahogany base, it has been given by members of the Reardon family and his college and business friends. A small replica of the trophy will go to the recipient each year.

Bill Reardon, in addition to being named All-Maine center in 1949, was president of Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, was chairman of the Student Judiciary Committee and the Ivy Day Committee, and served on the Student Council Disciplinary Committee. Before his death he was with the Group Insurance Department of the Aetna Insurance Company in Boston.

Significant Council Action

In recent years Alumni Fund Chairmen and their Associate Directors have sensed the reaching of a sort of plateau in Alumni Fund performance, a plateau beyond which performance results seem unable to climb. Search for the obstacles has dominated the discussions in Board meetings, particularly so during the past year.

With former Alumni Fund Chairmen McCarthy '19 and Pierce '39 participating in the deliberations, the Directors at their July and October meetings unanimously agreed upon two communications to be addressed to the Alumni Council. They were:

RESOLVED: that the Directors of the Alumni Fund believe that an urgent need for the future success of the Alumni Fund is an Alumni House.

VOTED: that the Alumni Fund Directors unanimously recommend that the Alumni Fund be made the responsibility of the Alumni Council.

After much discussion the Council concurred with the expressed sentiment of the Fund Directors in both communications.

A committee, consisting of Council Members Welch '38, Connor '36 and Frost '42 and Messrs. Shute '31 and Bernstein '22 of the Board of Overseers, was appointed and asked to report to the Council at its February sessions what action should be taken to make the Alumni Fund the responsibility of the Alumni Council.

The Council Committee on the Alumni House was directed to examine into the feasibility of acquiring an Alumni House and to recommend procedures to the Council in February. The Committee consists of Messrs. Connor '36, Pierce '39, Orne '30, Perkins '25, Smith '29 and Thayer '28.

It is hoped that definite progress toward bringing about these important alumni objectives may soon be reported.

Gorondi Rotary Scholar

Alexander Z. Gorondi of Buenos Aires, Argentina, has been awarded a Rotary Scholarship Grant at Bowdoin for the current academic year. The award, made by the 779th District of Rotary International, is part of a scholarship plan set up by that group in 1956. Two grants of $1100 each have been made to foreign students enrolled this fall at Bowdoin and Bates. Next year's awards will go to students at Colby College and Laval University in Canada, while in 1960-61 two foreign students will be selected at the University of Maine and the University of New Hampshire. The goal of the program is the furthering of international understanding and good will.

A native of Debrecen, Hungary, Gorondi went to Argentina at the age of 10 in 1948 as a refugee and was graduated in 1957 from the Buenos Aires National College. He is living in Freeport with Dr. and Mrs. Louis V. Dorogi, who are also Hungarian refugees.

Rhodes Candidates

Two seniors have been selected as Rhodes Scholarship candidates from Maine and Virginia. G. Raymond Babinneau of Hempstead, N. Y., will appear in December before the Maine selection committee, and J. Skelton Williams jr. of Richmond, Va., will take part in the Virginia competition.

Bowdoin's fifteenth Rhodes Scholar, Roger Howell jr. '58 of Baltimore, Md., is currently in his first year at St. John's College at Oxford University.

Delta Sigma Wins Trophy

The Harvey Dow Gibson Memorial Trophy for the greatest improvement in scholastic standing during the previous academic year has been awarded to Delta Sigma fraternity. The trophy honors the late Harvey D. Gibson of the Class of 1902, for many years a Trustee of Bowdoin and President of the Manufacturers Trust Company in New York, where he was widely known for his leadership in business and civic life.

131 Managers

Maine is second only to California in the number of communities with town or city managers, according to the December, 1958, Bowdoin College Bulletin, entitled "Municipal Charters in Maine: The Case of Brunswick." Dr. Clement E. Vose, formerly Associate Professor of Government, and Kenneth E. Carpenter of Yeadon, Pa., who was graduated last June, are the authors of the newly published study.

The booklet points out that one hundred thirty-one Maine communities are now operating with a manager. Included are fifteen of the State's twenty-one cities, nineteen towns with charters, and fifteen of Maine's twenty-one largest towns which are organized under the general statutes of the state.

Much of the booklet is taken up with a discussion of town government in Brunswick. Voters of the town have refused to accept proposed charters six times — 1858, 1885, 1905, 1943, 1953, and 1955.

Copies of "Municipal Charters in Maine: The Case of Brunswick" are available at the Bureau for Research in Municipal Government, Hubbard Hall. The bulletin is the twentieth in a series initiated in 1915 by Professor Orren C. Hornell H'51.

Texas Company Grant

Bowdoin has once again been selected as one of the privately-financed United States colleges and universities to receive unrestricted grants-in-aid under The Texas Company's aid-to-education program. The grant, which amounts to $1,500 for the academic year 1958-59, is without stipulation as to its use. A similar grant a year ago was used for work in the Department of Physics.

Glee Club Schedule

The Glee Club, under the direction this year of Professor Robert K. Beckwith, has a full schedule lined up for the second semester, beginning on February 27 and 28 with concerts at Newton, Mass., and Norton, Mass. The following week, on March 6, it will sing at Nasson College in Springvale. Four days later it is Lewiston and on March 13 Campus Chest at Bowdoin.

The annual spring tour will take the Glee Club to Aroostook County and Canada for the first time in its history. The trip will start with a concert in Bangor on March 20 and continue on successive days in Houlton, Fredericton, Elijah Kellogg of the Class of 1840, in addition to being an author of boys' books and a beloved minister, was also a boating enthusiast. His Harpswell-Hampton boat — or, as it is sometimes called, New England boat — has been restored as an in-the-water, sailable exhibit at the Marine Historical Association's Mystic Seaport in Connecticut.

The boat, which was built at Birch Island near Wilson Point, Harpswell, probably shortly after Kellogg was graduated from Bowdoin, was taken from a barn at the Kellogg farm in Harpswell in 1955. It had been lying there since 1912, deteriorating considerably, along with the barn.

The Harpswell-Hampton craft is a double-ender, 23 feet long, with a six-foot, six-inch beam and a draft of about three feet, aft, where her keel is deepest. The boat is designed to carry a cat-ketch rig and has a short bow sprit on which a jib can be set flying.

This type of boat originated in the early 19th century and was carried on the Banks schooners before the dory became popular. It was also called "Hampton boat," "Hampton whaler," "Crotch Island pinkie," and "Isle of Shoals boat."

New Brunswick; Saint John, New Brunswick; Bar Harbor, and Waterville.

On April 3 the group will sing at Simmons College and on April 4 at Wheelock College. Another weekend trip, on April 17 and 18, will take members to Lasell Junior College and Pembroke College. On May 14 they will sing once again at the Boston Pops concert.

A Birthday Coming Up

The Masque and Gown's schedule for the next few months calls for a dramatic reading of George Bernard Shaw's The Apple Cart on December 12, the production of My Three Angels as the winter houseparty presentation, the twenty-fourth annual student-written one-act play contest on March 12, and a faculty-cast production on April 2 and 3.

Director of Dramatics George H. Quinby '23 has invited all previous winners of the one-act play contest back for the silver anniversary of the event in March. It is hoped that a good percentage of the 19 men may be back in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall, perhaps to help judge the plays being performed.

Fund Conference

Forty-five alumni attended the ninth annual Alumni Fund conference on the campus on October 10 and 11. Included were men from eight states and the District of Columbia.

The conference opened with a meeting of the Directors of the Alumni Fund, with 1958-59 Chairman Vincent B.

Alumni Fund Progress

As noted in the annual Fund report in the October ALUMNUS the objectives of the 1958-59 Alumni Fund are $160,000 and a contribution from 60% of Bowdoin men or 4676 alumni contributors.

Chairman Vincent B. Welch '38, his associate Directors and the fifty-seven Agents have set in motion a vigorous appeal program which is aimed at reaching or exceeding both of these objectives. The October Fund conference was a stimulating affair. The Fund Team is enthusiastically at its job of assembling the vitally important alumni gift to Bowdoin.

A good start has been made. The Christmas spirit and, perhaps, too, that yearly tax consciousness have played a part in the host of contributions already in. Mr. Welch is appreciative; he asks that all Bowdoin men join up — if at least 4676 of them do, as their means permit, the job will be done.

Welch '38 of Washington, D. C., presiding. Directors and Class Agents attended the Bowdoin Freshman-Hebron Academy football game that afternoon and saw the Polar Bear Cubs come out on top emphatically 58 to 0. Eight of the 30 freshmen who played were awarded Alumni Fund scholarships last spring.

At a dinner at the Stowe House on Friday evening six Class Agents who led their decade groups in the 1957-58 Fund received special recognition. They are Wallace M. Powers '04, S. Sewall Webster '10, Lloyd O. Coulter '18, Carleton S. Connor '36, Vincent B. Welch '38, and Oliver W. Hone '57.

Agents who spoke at the evening work session at the Stowe House were Lloyd O. Coulter '18, Byron L. Mitchell '25, Samuel A. Ladd jr. '29, Robert M. Cross '45, and Bruce C. McGorrill '53.

Alumni Day

A capacity crowd of some 2500 people witnessed the 1958 Polar Ice Capades at the Arena on Alumni Day, November 8. Olympic and world's champion skater Hayes Alan Jenkins was starred in a cast of 25 figure skaters from the Skating Club of Boston. Carl de Suze '38, Boston radio and television personality, was master of ceremonies, and Montgomery Wilson, Director of the Ice Chips of 1958, was both director and producer.

Hundreds of alumni returned for Alumni Weekend. They watched Maine rack up its sixth straight victory over the Polar Bears in football, 37 to 0. They attended fraternity formal dinners and initiation ceremonies, watched a varsity-freshman-alumni swimming meet, and consumed lobster stew in the Sargent Gymnasium. At this luncheon Paul K. Niven '16 of Brunswick was awarded the Alumni Fund Cup for 1958.

Following the football game many alumni attended an informal reception at the Moulton Union by President and Mrs. James S. Coles and Alumni Council President and Mrs. Leland W. Hovey '26. Some of the more youthful alumni danced to the music of Al Corey's orchestra in the Gym Saturday night.

Letters To The Editor

Back from Europe, and catching up on my reading, I am delighted to discover what good judgment was used last June in the Alumni Service Awards. It was good to see the citations reproduced, and I heartily concur.

I enjoyed the special April issue on Higher Education, too, and am sure that it must have aroused great interest.

Our tenants must have found the June issue so interesting that they took it away with them. May I ask you to have another copy sent to me?

CLARENCE D. ROUILLARD '24

I was so impressed by Professor Whiteside's recent "Browsing" column on history that I feel compelled to write you.

The piece in the August ALUMNUS said in a very articulate fashion what I have been thinking for some time. As a matter of fact, I have been, I think, subconsciously quoting Professor Whiteside's ideas without giving them the public credit which is due him.

It was a superb diagnosis, and wherever people are interested in history, it will be appreciated.

1958-59 Bowdoin Plan Students

Twelve foreign students from nine different countries are studying at Bowdoin this year under the "Bowdoin Plan." Three are from Korea and two from Sweden. The other seven come from Argentina, Denmark, Germany, Ghana, Hungary, Japan, and Panama.

The list of Bowdoin Plan students, together with the fraternities sponsoring them, follows:

STUDENT	CITY AND COUNTRY	FRATERNITY
George K. Blagoege	Accra, Ghana	Delta Sigma
Soon Chough	Kangnung, Korea	Zeta Psi
Albert de St. Malo jr.	Panama City, Panama	Chi Psi
Hakan N. G. Gabel	Gothenburg, Sweden	Alpha Delta Phi
Nils Hedenstedt	Nykoping, Sweden	Psi Upsilon
Chong-Un Kim	Kyunggi, Korea	Alpha Tau Omega
Denes Martonffy	Nagykikinda, Hungary	Sigma Nu
Fernando M. Miquelarena	Buenos Aires, Argentina	Theta Delta Chi
Harald H. T. Ponader	Bayreuth, Germany	Kappa Sigma
Henrik Stenbjerre	Nyborg, Denmark	Delta Kappa Epsilon
Taneshiro Yamamoto	Yokohama, Japan	Alpha Rho Upsilon
In Sup Yuin	Seoul, Korea	Beta Theta Pi

Books

ROY A. GALLANT, Exploring the Sun: Doubleday and Company, Inc., 1958; pp. 56; $2.50. Exploring Chemistry: Doubleday and Company, Inc., 1958; pp. 120; $2.95. Exploring the Planets: Doubleday and Company, Inc., 1958; pp. 121; $2.50.

Exploring the Sun is a space-age book. What I like best about it is that it starts a person thinking big. One cupful, ten gallons, and two acres are easy amounts for us to comprehend, but how about a number followed by twelve or more zeros to express miles? For example, the distance from one end of our galaxy, the Milky Way, to the other end is expressed as 80,000 light years, and a light year is approximately 5,900,000,000,000 miles. Matters of distance are not the only expressions difficult to comprehend either. Try to imagine, for instance, what the sun must be like at a temperature of 6000 degrees or how much energy it gives off in one second if the amount surpasses all of the energy mankind has used in its entire history.

This book is a storehouse of information about that star we call the sun. As Mr. Gallant says, in five minutes of reading you can learn what it has taken man several thousands of years to learn about the sun. The author takes us from its very probable beginning to its probable and very dramatic end, getting an assist from British astronomer Fred Hoyle in his last chapter entitled "The day the sun goes out." If you are interested in looking, through the eyes of a scientist, a few billion years into the future, this is the book for you.

Exploring Chemistry is a very pleasant introduction to chemistry for any age group, for this history of the science reads like a story. It is full of philosophers and alchemists and even a fanatic named Theophrastus Bombastus von Hohenheim, better known as Paracelsus. Although these people spread theories which were untrue, each left an important legacy to modern chemistry. We are indebted to the philosophers for asking what matter is and why it acts as it does. We are indebted to the alchemists for their careful laboratory procedure and for their development of specialized laboratory equipment. And we should be eternally grateful to the fanatics for "burning the books" and saving only the theories that could be proved true through experiment.

From this time on, the science of chemistry advanced rapidly. It is a science that thrives on problems, and this is an age full of problems for the chemist. What can be done to meet the needs of a rising population that requires more and more of the natural resources that are running low — metal ores, coal, oil, and fresh water? These areas are just a few of the frontiers of chemistry.

Perhaps the most often asked question about the planets is, "Can life exist upon them?" Exploring the Planets does not stop at the answer "no." You see the planets through the eyes of a scientist and his illustrator, and you finish the book aware of how richly blessed is our planet the Earth.

Particularly I like the way this book helps me visualize the comparative sizes of the planets and their distances from the sun. At the start of each chapter the Earth is pictured beside a neighbor-planet. The text compares our galaxy to a field about which are scattered oranges, lemons, peas, seeds, and grains of sand. These represent the planets at their relative distances from a two-foot globe in the center which is the sun.

The book contains a constellation chart and yearly tables enabling you to locate the planets on your own at the times when they can best be seen.

All of the "Exploring" books feature the same appealing presentation of science. If you should miss a point in the text, you will not miss it in the pictures which closely parallel the text. It doesn't seem to matter which illustrator Mr. Gallant uses — the same colorful and informative effect is achieved.

JEANNETTE S. CROSS

Author

ROY A. GALLANT '50, who is associated with Doubleday and Company in New York, is studying for his doctorate at Columbia University. In addition to the three "Exploring" books reviewed in this issue, he is the author of Exploring the Moon, Exploring Mars, Exploring the Universe, and Exploring the Weather. All were reviewed in earlier issues of the ALUMNUS. In 1957 Mr. Gallant was the recipient of the Thomas A. Edison Award for his Exploring the Universe.

Reviewer

JEANNETTE STEELE CROSS, the wife of the Managing Editor of the ALUMNUS, is becoming an expert in "exploring" various parts and aspects of the universe. She has now reviewed for this magazine all seven of Roy Gallant's "Exploring" volumes.

Notes

Most reviewers were unable to meet the deadline for this issue. As a result the February ALUMNUS should carry reviews of books by Melvin T. Copeland '06, Charles Mergendahl '41, Professor Jean Darbelnet, Herman Dreer '10, Milton M. Gordon '39, Herbert T. Silsby II '48, and William J. Norton '05.

Bowdoin Browsing

This "Browsing" column has been written by Dr. William D. Geoghegan, Assistant Professor of Religion at Bowdoin since 1954. A native of Wilmington, Delaware, he was graduated from Yale in 1942. Following graduate work at Harvard Divinity School and Drew Theological Seminary he received a bachelor of divinity degree in 1945. Further study at Columbia University and Union Theological Seminary brought him his doctor of philosophy degree in 1950.

From 1944 to 1946 Professor Geoghegan served as pastor of Christiana Methodist Church in Christiana, Delaware. From 1950 until his appointment to the Bowdoin faculty he was Chaplain of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Rochester, where he was also Assistant Professor of Religion.

At Bowdoin Dr. Geoghegan teaches courses in Biblical literature, the history of religions, and great Christian authors. He is the author of "Platonism in Recent Religious Thought," published earlier this year by the Columbia University Press.

A browser must sometimes feel like St. Paul before the Athenians on the Areopagus — a "babbler," literally "a seed-picker" or, as the exegete on Acts in The Interpreter's Bible reminds us, in Shakespeare's words, "a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles." The Interpreter's Bible, a twelve-volume set published during the period from 1951 to 1957, is the most recent and the most comprehensive commentary in English on the Protestant Bible. In addition to usually excellent introductory articles throughout, the standard page contains at the top, in parallel columns, the King James and the Revised Standard Version translations; across the middle of the page, the scholarly explanation of the text; and at the bottom, again in parallel columns, a more popular interpretation of the Biblical text.

Although in many respects a valuable resource for the studious minister or layman, the set tends to reflect too consistently a moderately conservative theological point of view. This past summer, as I went through the exegesis on the New Testament books from Acts to the Pastoral Epistles, I was disappointed with the paucity of references to the work of Rudolph Bultmann, formerly Professor of New Testament at the University of Marburg and one of the few really creative New Testament scholars living today. Bultmann's greatest work, a two-volume Theology of the New Testament published in an English translation by Scribner's in 1954 and 1955, is an unusually able attempt to make sense out of the ideas of the New Testament, especially the thought of Paul.

More than two decades ago Bultmann established his reputation as a leading "form-critic" or analyst of the oral forms such as sayings, parables, miracle-tales, legends, and myths which are assumed to underlie the written text of the Gospels. Since this work was an extension of the methods of literary criticism which had long been practiced in Biblical scholarship, his findings were rapidly assimilated into the current critical discussion. But his Theology of the New Testament, including as well some earlier essays on the same theme, has aroused violent controversy. His critics claim that the heart of his work is his program of "demythologizing" the Gospels, and that for the Christian faith which he has subtly betrayed he has substituted, especially in his interpretation of Paul's thought, the basic ideas of the atheistic German Existentialist philosopher, Martin Heidegger. (It is interesting to observe that a similar charge is made against Paul Tillich, University Professor of Theology at Harvard. An excellent discussion of Heidegger's influence in contemporary theology is to be found in John Macquarrie: An Existentialist Theology; London, SCM Press, 1955.)

Actually, Bultmann's "demythologization" rests upon a radical, although long-familiar, distinction between the essential elements of the Christian faith and the outmoded world-view of a three-story universe heavily endowed with supernatural marvels with which it was originally associated. Why, he asks, should the present-day understanding of the Christian faith be jeopardized by needless concessions to the ignorance and superstition of antiquity? The better procedure, he points out, is to relate the Christian faith to a world-view which many modern men do find credible.

Bultmann believes that modern man, apart from faith, finds his existence in the physical universe as disclosed by modern sciences arbitrary, ungoverned by any moral purpose greater than the wisdom of the species or of its outstanding exemplars and, therefore, in terms of an ultimate assurance, meaningless. It is certainly no novelty to find a Christian thinker of modern times holding a view like this: Pascal, Schleiermacher, Kierkegaard, Reinhold Niebuhr, and Paul Tillich are no less sensitive than Bultmann to the predicament of the unbeliever.

Bultmann has used some of Heidegger's ideas in his own work because he thought them best suited to express the questions which the Christian faith answers. To put it another way, he has been stimulated by Heidegger's thinking to explain what is not apparent in the pages of the New Testament: the thought-forms of the unbelievers to whom, for example, St. Paul addressed the Christian message of divine grace.

However, I think that there is an even deeper and broader reason underlying the hostility to Bultmann and his ideas, and that is the prevailing suspicion of philosophy itself in many religious circles. Distaste for philosophizing about religion has some justification in the fact that the Bible is, only in the loosest of senses, a philosophical work. But it is equally true that the perennial task of understanding the message of the Bible in a particular period of history has been one in which philosophy has played a large and valuable part. While there have been theologians like Tertullian who have asserted that Jerusalem should have nothing to do with Athens, the formative thinkers of the Christian tradition, like St. Augustine and St. Thomas Aquinas, have always drawn upon philosophy to clarify both doctrines and the problems to which they were applied. In fact, Bultmann is much less a disciple of Heidegger than St. Augustine of Plato and Plotinus, and St. Thomas of Aristotle. And beyond these examples, it seems to me, there is an important principle involved: there is enough unreason in human existence as it is; must the contemporary understanding of the Christian faith be needlessly cluttered up with it, too?

Whether or not one finds Bultmann's thinking completely congenial, I think that the reader who will take the necessary pains with his Theology of the New Testament, or even with his recent soft-cover Primitive Christianity (New York: Living Age Books, 1956), will be rewarded by being engaged in an exciting dialectic which has the happy facility of not only resolving old perplexities but also of propounding new ones. Christian theology is too important a matter to take altogether bookishly. Yet books, no substitute for the life of the mind, at their best communicate something of life's immediacy and, therefore, something of religious concern and of the mind's proper interest.

BRUNSWICK

October 29 was the occasion for a new enterprise by the Bowdoin Club of Brunswick. Two committees arranged a meeting aimed at informing qualified sub-freshman prospects about Bowdoin.

Thirty-one seniors and their principals and counselors from the high schools in Brunswick, Bath, Freeport, Lisbon Falls, and North Yarmouth were guests of the Club and the College. They were conducted on an extensive tour of the campus, beginning at four o'clock in the afternoon. At five they gathered at Sills Hall for a brief program of color slides and comments, designed to tell them something about undergraduate life. The guests then had an informal meeting with members of the faculty and staff: Herbert Brown, Malcolm Morrell '24, Adam Walsh, Paul Hazelton '42, LeRoy Greason, and Dean Nathaniel Kendrick.

Other Brunswick-area alumni joined the group for a 6:30 buffet dinner in the dining room of the Moulton Union, after which everyone moved to the main lounge. Club President Paul Niven '16 introduced President Coles, who welcomed the guests in behalf of the College and commended Brunswick alumni for their renewed interest.

Council Member Philmore Ross '43 discussed plans for a second gathering in the spring, and most alumni present were strong in voicing their approval of an informal meeting to welcome some of the newer faculty members.

Vice President Donald Parks '28 introduced the speaker of the evening, Professor Nathan Dane '37, who gave an interesting, vigorous, and unusual talk which impressed both alumni and guests.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Fifteen alumni and guests gathered on November 1 for a social hour and dinner at the Liederkrantz Club in Syracuse.

Alumni who attended were Arthur Chapman '17, Edward Hildreth '18, George Fogg '43, Dick O'Shea '45, Tom Chapman '50, Bob Crockford '50, Dick Herrick '50, and Gordon Hoyt '50.

Elections were held with these results: President, Jack O'Donnell '37; Vice President, Dick Herrick; and Secretary Treasurer and Council Member, Tom Chapman.

The club's next meeting is scheduled for Saturday, April 4, at the LeMoyne Manor in Liverpool, N. Y. Area alumni are asked to mark the date on their calendars.

CHICAGO

The Bowdoin Club of Chicago met on October 8 at Barney's Restaurant for a social hour and dinner. President Coles brought the latest news from the College.

On November 3 alumni and their ladies gathered at Barney's for a social hour and dinner, after which they heard a talk by Senator Paul Douglas '13.

Plans are going forward for one or two more meetings after the first of the year.

KENNEBEC VALLEY

A small but enthusiastic group of 17 members met for a social hour and dinner at the Elmwood Hotel in Waterville on October 15.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Willard Arnold '51; Vice President, William Webster '50; Secretary-Treasurer, Adrian Asherman '52; and Council Member, Robert Martin '41.

Professor Robert Beckwith of the Music Department spoke briefly on the coming spring tour of the Glee Club and the need for local support of a Waterville concert.

The main speaker of the evening was Professor LeRoy Greason of the English Department. He commented favorably on the recent student action which abolished hazing at the College. He then described various phases of Freshman English and the English major program. In conclusion he voiced his opinions as to the causes for deficiencies in the previous English training of some of the freshmen.

The regular meeting was adjourned at nine o'clock, but some of the members and the guests lingered for a pleasant, extended session.

LOS ANGELES

September 14 was the date of a Sunday outing of the Bowdoin Club of Los Angeles at the Pasadena home of Terry Dunning '49. Secretary Dave Smith '46 reports that about twenty people attended, including President George Wheeler '01, the Herb Wehbs '23, the Bill Spinneys '13, the Jim Hedges '44, the Ralph Bucknams M'95, the Lendal McLellans '23, the Duke Daves '31, the Reggie Spurr's '46, and the Smiths.

Klaus Klimmeck '58 visited Secretary Smith and other members in Los Angeles and Pasadena during his September visit to the West Coast. One gathering was held at the Red Mill in Pasadena and another at the Hotel Statler in Los Angeles.

Bowdoin men in and around Los Angeles, as well as those who are passing through, are reminded that the Club regularly holds noon luncheon meetings on the fourth Tuesday of every month at the Statler.

NEW JERSEY

Approximately twenty alumni gathered for a social hour and dinner at the Suburban Hotel in East Orange on October 29. President Malcolm Moore '50 presided and introduced the guests from the College, Hubert Shaw '36 and Robert Glover '56, who spoke on Bowdoin's admissions policy and discussed plans for developing alumni assistance in working with subfreshmen from the area. Plans were begun for a local meeting with subfreshmen in early February. A lengthy question and answer period ensued.

PHILADELPHIA

The Bowdoin Club of Philadelphia held a stag dinner at the Engineers' Club on October 16. Plans are going forward for the annual dinner on Saturday, January 24, when alumni and wives will gather at the Presidential Apartments (Dolly Madison Room) to meet with President Coles. The social hour is at 6 and the dinner at 7.

PORTLAND

The Bowdoin Club of Portland held its annual fall meeting at Valle's Restaurant in Scarborough on November 6. Approximately 120 alumni gathered for a social hour and dinner.

FUTURE CLUB MEETINGS

Cleveland — Dinner (Alumni and Sub-freshmen) - University Club - Monday, December 22 - Social hour at 6: Dinner at 7.

Los Angeles — Monthly Luncheon — Hotel Statler - Tuesday, December 23 - 12 noon.

Washington — Monthly Luncheon - Lotus Restaurant - Tuesday, January 6, 1959 - 12 noon.

Rhode Island (Providence) — Monthly Luncheon - University Club - Wednesday, January 7 - 12 noon.

St. Louis — Alumni and Wives - Thursday evening, January 8.

Milwaukee — Dinner Meeting - University Club - Friday, January 9 - Social hour at 5:30: Dinner at 6:30.

Detroit — Evening Meeting - Saturday, January 10.

New York — Annual Dinner - Friday evening, January 23.

Philadelphia — Annual Dinner - Dolly Madison Room of the Presidential Apartments - Saturday, January 24 - Social hour at 6: Dinner at 7.

Los Angeles — Monthly Luncheon - Hotel Statler - Tuesday, January 27 - 12 noon.

Boston — Annual Dinner (Alumni and Wives) - Woodland Golf Club, 1897 Washington, Auburndale - Saturday, February 28.

Central New York — Spring Dinner Meeting (Alumni and wives) - LeMoyne Manor in Liverpool - Saturday, April 4.

The ALUMNI COUNCIL holds its annual mid-winter session on campus on Friday and Saturday, February 27 and 28, 1959.

President Jotham Pierce '39 presided during the after-dinner remarks. Coach Adam Walsh was presented with a framed drawing by the Newspaper Writers of Maine. Coach Nels Corey '39 discussed the prospects for the forthcoming hockey season, and Coach Bob Donham commented on the outlook for basketball. Dean Nathaniel Kendrick reported on the current state of the College.

ST. PETERSBURG

Convener Charles Lincoln '91 reports, "Thanks to an S.O.S. to my cousin Fred Fessenden '95, he notified most of the alumni around before I arrived on November 17. Twelve accepted and three failed to make it. Present were Smith '90, Lincoln '91, Fessenden '95, Carmichael '97, Pope '11, Barbour '12, Conant '13, Tarbox '14, and Kennedy '13.

"Two additions to the Club this winter are Fred Hart '12 and Rex Conant '13. By the middle of December a few more winter members will be here, and probably a few of the nearby cities will make the grade. Oh, yes, Don Redfern '11 is a new recruit. Anyone in Florida this winter wishing to attend our Bowdoin meetings should contact me at 342 Roland Court, N.E., St. Petersburg."

WASHINGTON

About forty-five Bowdoin and Tufts alumni joined forces for a dinner on November 6 at the Continental Hotel. Bowdoin Club President William Johnson '30 introduced the speaker, Robert G. Baker, Secretary of the Senate Majority Committee, who talked on "Post Election Critique — Won, Lost, and Why." A showing of movies of the 1958 Bowdoin-Tufts football game followed.

On November 18 the Bowdoin Club of Washington held a luncheon in honor of retired Supreme Court Justice Harold Burton '09.

Secretary Prescott Pardoe '51 reminds all alumni in the area that regular luncheons are held at twelve noon on the first Tuesday of every month at the Lotus Restaurant.

BOWDOIN TEACHERS

On October 2 the Bowdoin Teachers' Club held its annual meeting at the Tarratine Club in Bangor. Twenty-five alumni were present, and Ford Dyer '30 presided. The College was represented by Professor Albert Thayer '22, Director of Admissions Hubert Shaw '36, Assistant Bursar Wolcott Hokanson '50, and Soon Chough '61. Mr. Hokanson spoke on the problems of meeting college expenses, and Mr. Chough gave views of a Bowdoin Plan student.

Claude Bonang '52 is in charge of plans for next year's meeting, which will be held in Lewiston.

Looking

Reading the fall issues of the Orient, one lives in primitive times. No football and few lectures, concerts, or entertainments. Saturday evening whist parties in the Ends were a "great fad." Life at Bowdoin was just as important to those who were in college then as it is to the undergraduates today, but their college life was certainly very inhred.

There was some discussion in the Orient of an article on Appleton Hall in a Boston newspaper which said that Uncle Tom's Cabin was written in room 7. In reply to an inquiry, Mrs. Stowe wrote stating that the book was written in the "old Titcomb House," which is now named for her. Her letter was filed in the Brunswick Public Library.

J. S. Towne's new drug store, located in the Brackett Block where the Brunswick Hardware and Plumbing Supply Company now does business, was selling the only milk shakes in town.

Bates and Colby both defeated Bowdoin in fall baseball games.

The opportunity for starting a new fraternity was obvious from the fact that there were at this time 25 non-society men in college. It was perceived that otherwise the traditional place of the fraternities in Bowdoin life would deteriorate. Chi Psi, whose chapter at Bowdoin had ceased during the Civil War period, looked the situation over at this time but postponed organizing a chapter for several years. Delta Upsilon, Kappa Sigma, and Beta Theta Pi were the first three of the newer fraternities which were to be added to the five which had occupied the field for several decades — Alpha Delta Phi, Psi Upsilon, Delta Kappa Epsilon, Theta Delta Chi and Zeta Psi.

A meeting of the students was held on October 31 in the large room called Lower Memorial on the ground floor of that building to listen to "proposals for lighting the dormitories by electricity." For a payment of 80 cents per month one light would be installed; two lights for $1.40 and three for $2.20. Response was not favorable, "most of the boys feeling that the price was too high."

There was great interest in the national election, which resulted in the defeat of President Cleveland by Benjamin Harrison although Cleveland had a majority of the popular vote. The sentiment of the College was overwhelmingly Republican. At Chapel on the Sunday after the election President Hyde, who was a "mug-wump" (i.e., white-collared supporter of Cleveland), commented on the election. He was pleased that it was a clean campaign fought on living issues and foretold that sectionalism was disappearing and the solid South would soon break up. On the other hand, he deplored the expense of the campaign and the contributions from special interests. "The moral enthusiasm of the war has died out. The moral enthusiasm over great economic questions is yet to be invoked." He was confident that the time was coming when people would look beyond their own self interest and vote for the common weal.

The Republican victory was celebrated by a torch-light procession which started in front of the Church on the Hill and marched down Maine Street. Professor Robinson's partly finished house (now remodeled into the rectory of St. Charles Parish) was lighted by candles in every window from top to bottom notwithstanding the shavings and builders' odds and ends. The professor said that he did not expect there would be a bonfire, but if there should be, it would be in a good cause.

Eleven percent of the undergraduates were sons of alumni.

The exodus of students for teaching jobs, which in earlier years had greatly reduced the student attendance during the winter months, had now diminished to the point that only 24 were out teaching. Some men who later were to be distinguished Bowdoin graduates were included in the list.

Some 30 "fellows" stayed through the Thanksgiving recess, most of them being entertained by members of the faculty. In the evening they could choose among a concert at the Methodist Church, a poverty ball in the town hall, and a French dance at Lemont Hall.

The football team coached by McClave zigzagged. In the state Bowdoin and Colby tied for the championship, each winning two out of three. Bowdoin won from Colby and Maine but lost to Bates. Outside of the three state championship games Bowdoin held intercollegiate champion Harvard to a score of 5 to 0, won over Fort McKinley, New Hampshire State, and Tufts, but lost to Brown and Holy Cross. As in several other years the Tufts game ended the season, but instead of the slump which frequently occurred the Bowdoin team put up its best game of the year.

The College felt reflected glory from the victory of West Point, captained by Cope Philoon '05, over Annapolis. It was Cope's last football game.

A slump in college interest in athletics, which was felt at the beginning of the fall term, was overcome by the satisfactory record of the football team. The recovery was indicated by a mass meeting at which $160 in voluntary contributions was obtained to pay up the football deficit.

114 freshmen, four specials, and nine men for advanced standing registered at the beginning of the fall term. In the Medical School 22 first-year men registered, including nine college seniors. The Medical School opened in the fall instead of in January as had been the custom for many years.

The hoary joke about Professor Moody's entry of Triangle in the Topsham Fair races again appears in the Orient, but this year Triangle was a pacer.

Tentative faculty steps to end hazing encountered the students' feeling that the problem was one for students and not faculty and came to nothing. A committee did, however, investigate the matter of an undergraduate advisory council and reported a provisional constitution to the mass meeting for the election of football managers. It was duly adopted and the first ten council members elected. The council, which was eventually succeeded by the present student council, started out vigorously, setting up committees and suggesting amendments to the athletic constitution and improvement in the general elections of the athletic association.

The importance of the New Meadows Inn to the College is evidenced by the fact that in four issues the Orient mentions successive dates set for closing the Inn for the winter. The Deutscher Verein and other college groups were hard put to it for a meeting place during the winter months with the Inn closed.

Again the College took interest in a national campaign. The successful Taft was generally favored by both students and faculty. The Orient speaks of Bowdoin as being "a stronger Republican institution than ever before." Governor-elect Bert Fernald and Dr. Daniel A. Robinson '73 were the principal speakers at a rally held under the joint auspices of the Bowdoin Republican Club and the town committee at the town hall on the night before the election. The students formed on the campus and marched to the hall behind the band.

After much agitation an appropriation was approved by the faculty for supplying the dormitories with running water, a bowl on each floor and shower baths in Maine Hall. A petition signed by every occupant of every dormitory was filed with the faculty. Up to this time the occupants of the dormitories had had to carry water from the basement to their rooms. The faculty was reluctant to vote its approval because of the fear that the privilege would be abused. Shower baths were limited to Maine because of the better facilities in that dormitory for installation. It was announced that the showers were being installed on a trial basis and would be removed and none installed elsewhere if the privilege was abused.

The college band agreed with the board of proctors that practice on band instruments in the dormitories would be confined to the afternoon hours.

Wesleyan invited Bowdoin to enter a triangular debating league with Cornell as the third member, but after consideration the invitation was declined.

A series of musical recitations was given during the winter by Professors Hutchins and Files in the Walker Art Building. Professor Hutchins played the orchestrion and Professor Files a piano with pianola attached, the instrument being loaned for the occasion. Student performers also participated. Successive evenings were devoted to Bach, Haydn, Mozart, and other classical composers.

The growing national scope of undergraduate membership is shown by the fact that a trans-Mississippi club with five members was organized.

The three Annie Talbot Cole lectures were given by the Reverend Charles Dinsmore on the subject of Dante.

The College opened for the year on Thursday, September 21, notwithstanding the provision of the by-laws setting the fourth Thursday of September as the opening date. According to the Orient, the librarian, whose job it was to arrange the opening dates, was much put to it to explain the discrepancy when it was discovered after the opening of the College. Two extra days were added to the Christmas vacation as a result of a student council petition.

The Masque and Gown sponsored the Shakespeare Players of New York in a production of Hamlet at the town hall.

The College was not too well pleased with the record of the football team. At the end of the season the football men at first refused by a vote of 12 to 6 to express confidence in Charlie Bowser, who had been the coach for four years. His attitude toward the players and the poor record of games won were the counts against him. Subsequently the team reversed its vote and voted unanimously in his favor. After a stormy six-hour secret session the Athletic Council voted to recommend his reappointment for a three-year term as football coach but to relieve him of any duties as head coach of hockey and baseball.

The team won from Wesleyan, Williams, and Tufts and lost to Massachusetts State, Colby, and Maine. As was to happen 25 years later, the game with Bates was a tie. The defeat of Tufts in the post-State Series game squelched the aspiration of Tufts to be regarded as champion of the New England colleges.

Marshall P. Cram '04, Professor of Chemistry, died on October 10 after an illness of two months. He had completed 25 years as a member of the Bowdoin faculty. Memorial services were held in the Chapel on Sunday, October 15. A bachelor, he bequeathed $20,000 to Alpha Delta Phi Fraternity and the residue of his estate, which included the Cram house and its contents, to the College.

In November Delta Upsilon opened with a house warming its rebuilt and remodeled house.

The freshman class included 20 sons of Bowdoin men.

Doubts arose as to the extent of the authority of the student council. College critics characterized it as an intellectual honorary society for winners of major letters. In order to make the group a more effective governing body a new constitution was drafted by a committee appointed by Council President Charles Allen '31. It was adopted by the students by a vote of 287 to 122. The unexpected number of dissenting votes was a surprise. The general sentiment was so overwhelmingly in favor of the new constitution that many students did not suppose that they needed to vote.

Dr. Gaylord W. Douglas, director for New England of the National Council for the Prevention of War, gave an address in Memorial Hall under the auspices of the College and churches of Brunswick. The address formed a part of Chapel exercises which for the occasion were transferred to Memorial Hall for the first time since World War I when Chapel had to be held in Memorial in the winter in order to economize on fuel.

Arrangements for Dr. Douglas' visit were made by a Bowdoin graduate, F. J. Libby '91, whose life work in organizations to promote peace had brought him national fame.

A few days later Admiral William V. Pratt H'29 of Belfast, who had been Chief of Naval Operations during World War I, declared to his audience in the Moulton Union that Navy preparation is the best means of preventing war. He said that professional pacifists "do not know what they are talking about" when it comes to naval affairs. Admiral Pratt said that the battleship is our most valuable asset in the Navy. He vigorously combatted arguments that battleships were becoming obsolete and would be sitting ducks for airplane attacks.

Professor Stanley Casson, Tallman Foundation lecturer, predicted that there would be a world crisis in six months and that another war would result in widespread revolutions and be fatal to world progress, but, even in Germany, he found a universal desire for peace. He doubted that Germany could recruit an army, at least 40% of the German nation being out of sympathy with the militaristic trend of existing government. The six Tallman lectures by Professor Casson were on Grecian archeology.

Professor H. R. Brown defeated Professor N. C. Kendrick, the previous year's winner, in the final round of the faculty tennis championship. It took nearly three hours to finish five sets.

The Masque and Gown for its first play of the season gave "Grumpy," a detective story.

In a field of 137 starters representing seven New England colleges Bowdoin harriers won second place in the fall intercollegiate cross-country run.

The alumni were being circularized as to changing Commencement from mid-week to weekend. To the surprise of most people an end-of-the-week commencement resulted. In this respect Bowdoin became unique among colleges in this part of the world, but the alumni have come to regard it as very sensible.

President Sills succeeded President Lowell of Harvard as a trustee of the Carnegie Foundation and was also appointed by Governor Brann to head a state commission for the investigation of school finances.

Sponsored by the Achorn Bird Fund, Dr. Sutton talked on "A Year in the Arctic with Brush and Camera."

President Sills and the Glee Club joined in the send-off from Portland of Phillips H. Lord '25 ("Seth Parker") for a round-the-world cruise on the schooner "Seth Parker." The cruise ended in disaster before the vessel had gone very far.

John Strachey presented in Memorial Hall the radical left-wing view of world conditions. Admittedly a British communist, he called his talk "The Coming Struggle for Power" and prophesied an early war unless the capitalistic system should promptly yield to the inevitable rise of communism as the supreme power in the world. The lecturer did not hold up the Russian government as the model for the world to follow but praised communism rather than Communism. "Our obstinacy" must be "broken literally by the brute force of struggle and strife" or else we must "accept the great system which offers tranquillity, security, and opportunity — communism."

Twelve bands syncopated at the house dances for the Christmas parties. The guest list totalled 250. The Masque and Gown presented another mystery play, "The Man Who Changed His Name." Larry Funk and his orchestra played for the Gym dance.

House codes of social conduct were approved by Dean Nixon. Unchaperoned women were to be allowed in the public rooms ordinarily until midnight and until one hour after the close of any college social function. Two or more couples were to be allowed in other than public rooms on days of college social functions. Responsibility for administration of the code was placed in the hands of the undergraduates, and each fraternity was requested to draft its own code. The Dean did not make his usual houseparty admonishment concerning drinking, leaving this to be regulated by the various houses except where special complaint might be made to him. Moderation was to be the keynote of the new policy.

A shortwave radio station was operating spasmodically in the basement of the Searles Science Building with two undergraduates and Professor Little as licensed operators.

Necrology

1895 HOYT AUGUSTUS MOORE, for nearly fifty-five years a distinguished New York lawyer and since 1933 Vice President of the Bowdoin Board of Trustees, died at the Lenox Hill Hospital in New York at the age of 88 on November 18, 1958. Born on September 15, 1870, in Ellsworth, he traced his ancestry back to his eleventh great-grandfather, Edward Moore of Scotland, who was custodian in 1447 of Loudoun Castle in the parish of Loudon, Ayrshire. He prepared at Ellsworth High School and following his graduation from Bowdoin magna cum laude taught school as assistant principal of Wilton Academy, as superintendent of schools in Ellsworth, later as principal of Ellsworth High School, and as principal of Putnam (Conn.) High School.

In 1901 he decided to study law and entered Harvard Law School, receiving his bachelor of laws degree in 1904. He entered the Cravath law firm in New York that same year and became a partner on February 1, 1913. He continued in that capacity until December 31, 1957, when he became Counsel to the firm, which has been known as Cravath, Swaine & Moore since 1944.

He was a past president of the Maine Society of New York and was one of the original two hundred Phi Beta Kappa Associates, organized in 1940 to give financial support to the United Chapters. He was also a member of the Society of Colonial Wars, the New England Historical Society, the American Academy of Political and Social Science, and the University and Broad Street Clubs. He was elected an Overseer of the College in 1929 and a Trustee in 1933 and was awarded an honorary doctor of laws degree at Commencement in 1939.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Lora Parsons Moore, whom he married in Ellsworth on October 10, 1906; a son, Edward P. of Darien, Conn.; a daughter, Mrs. Dorothy Moore Tower, also of Darien; seven grandchildren; and a brother, Ernest L. '03. He was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon and Phi Beta Kappa. (See page 13.)

1901 ROLAND ENGENE CLARK, trust consultant for the First Portland National Bank and since 1949 Treasurer of the College, died in Portland on November 1, 1958, at the age of 79. Born in Houlton on July 3, 1879, he prepared at Ricker Classical Institute and following his graduation from Bowdoin became private secretary to Representative Llewellyn Powers in Washington. He received a bachelor of laws degree from Georgetown University in 1904 and practiced law in Houlton until 1917. Following 18 months' service in France as a major in the First Infantry Division during World War I, he was elected vice president of the Trust Department of the Fidelity Trust Company in Portland. He held the same position with the National Bank of Commerce from 1933 until its merger with the First Portland

National Bank early this year, when he became trust consultant.

A past president of the Trust Division of the American Bankers Association, he was elected to the Bowdoin Board of Overseers in 1939 and became a Trustee and Treasurer of the College in 1949. He was awarded an honorary master of arts degree in 1952. Surviving is his wife, Mrs. Gladys Tingle Clark, whom he married on February 14, 1941, in Baltimore, Md. His fraternity was Psi Upsilon. (See page 12.)

1903 LESLIE CLARK EVANS died in Portland on October 21, 1958. Born on May 18, 1883, in Lewiston, he was the son of Osman C. Evans '76. He prepared at South Portland High School and attended Bowdoin for part of his freshman year before leaving because of illness. He later attended Boston University for a year and then became a clerk in the ship chandlery firm of J. S. Winslow and Company in Portland until World War I, during and after which he served as a second mate in the merchant marine. In 1921 he became a clerk for Milliken Tomlinson Company and acquired a farm on the Gray Road in West Falmouth, where he spent the rest of his life. Medical School

1919 ENGENE HENRY DRAKE, M.D., one of Maine's outstanding specialists in internal medicine and a retired Rear Admiral in the Navy Medical Corps Reserve, died in Portland on October 4, 1958, at the age of 66. Born on August 7, 1892, in Pittsfield, he prepared at Maine Central Institute and was graduated from Bates College in 1914. Following his graduation from the Maine Medical School at Bowdoin in 1919, he served for two years as an assistant in medicine at the School and set up practice in Portland. He specialized in heart studies at Harvard in 1925 and in 1931 went to London and Vienna to do post-graduate work in internal medicine. He was chief of the medical staff at the Maine General Hospital from 1937 to 1948, except when he was on active duty with the Navy, from which he was retired as a rear admiral after winning a Bronze Star and serving as chief consulting cardiologist for the Pacific Fleet.

Organizer of the first heart clinic in Maine in 1925, Dr. Drake was also instrumental in establishing the Blue Shield program in the state. A past governor for Maine of the American College of Physicians, he was a member of the Portland Yacht Club and had a keen interest in Hereford cattle. In 1951 he was awarded the Portland Kiwanis Club's plaque for distinguished service to that city. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Effie Potter Drake, whom he married in Portland in 1923; and by a sister, Mrs. Mary Maloney of Newton, Mass.

The Maine Medical Center in Portland paid tribute to Dr. Mortimer Warren, who died in 1944, at the formal dedication of the Warren Memorial Laboratory on October 9. Dr. Warren, the hospital's first pathologist, served there for 22 years.

Honorary

1935 JEREMIAH DENIS MATTHIAS FORD, who taught romance languages at Harvard University for nearly fifty years and was one of the country's eminent scholars, died on November 13, 1958, at his home in Cambridge, Mass., at the age of 85. Born on July 2, 1873, in Cambridge, he was graduated from Harvard summa cum laude in 1894. He received a master of arts degree from Harvard in 1895 and a doctor of philosophy degree in 1897. He began teaching at Harvard in 1895 and was a member of the faculty until his retirement in 1943. He held honorary degrees from Bowdoin, Harvard, the University of Toulouse in France, the National University of Ireland, Trinity College in Dublin, Ireland, and Fordham.

When Bowdoin conferred an honorary doctor of letters degree on Professor Ford in 1935, the citation read, in part, as follows: "... decorated by the governments of Spain, France, Italy, and Roumania; Exchange Professor at French and Spanish universities; member of learned societies too numerous to mention, and author and editor of learned works too long to list; former President of the American Academy of Arts and Letters; President of the Dante Society; since 1907 holding the historic and distinguished chair of the Smith Professorship of French and Spanish languages at Harvard, only previously occupied in the past century by George Ticknor, our own Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, and James Russell Lowell; inspiring and helpful teacher of many Bowdoin graduates; in his own field recognized in America and abroad as having few equals and fewer superiors; representative of all that is best in American scholarship and gladly taken into the company of a college that still prides itself in being an institution of learning."

Professor Ford is survived by his wife, Mrs. Anna Fearn Ford, whom he married in Cambridge, Mass., on January 1, 1902; two sons, Robert and Dr. Richard Ford; and two daughters, Mrs. Hubert S. Packard and Mrs. Rawson L. Wood. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa at Harvard.

Former Faculty

EGBERT RAY NICHOLS, Visiting Professor of English at Bowdoin during the fall semester of 1954-55, died on April 5, 1958, at the age of 73. Born on May 6, 1884, in Mt. Ayr, Ind., he was graduated from Franklin College in 1907 and received a master of arts degree from Harvard in 1909. He joined the faculty at the University of Redlands in California in 1913 and served there for nearly forty years as director of debate, as producer of plays, and as chairman of the department of speech. Following his retirement in 1952 he taught on a Fulbright grant at Tohoku University in Japan before coming to Bowdoin. He was nationally known for his Redlands debating teams and was the founder and first president of Pi Kappa Delta, forensic honor society.

1898 The Governor Baxter State School for the Deaf on Mackworth Island off Portland held an open house on November 2. The school, which opened a year ago, was made possible through the generosity of Percival Baxter.

Percival was elected an honorary member of the American Institute of Park Executives this fall, becoming only the third honorary member in the 60-year history of that organization. On October 19 the Portland Sunday Telegram carried an editorial in recognition of this fact.

1899 Tom Merrill, in Sidney, Mont., at the age of 83 feels old age creeping up on him, but he drives his car, is a good walker, mows his lawn, and takes part in civic affairs.

Win Smith and his wife, who have been wintering in Florida for the last several years, will stay home in Baltimore, Md., this winter.

Harold Burton resigned as Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court on October 13, on the advice of his physician, after having served thirteen years on the high court. Later in the month sixteen of the twenty-three law clerks who had served him during his time on the bench honored Harold at a Saturday night dinner party. They gathered from all parts of the country. The dinner was given by Mrs. William S. Cheatham, his secretary at the Court, and her husband. As a special tribute, the justice's associates announced that they plan to establish a memorial book fund in his honor at the Bowdoin Library.

The occasion of the special convocation at Bowdoin in honor of our Class President, Justice Harold Burton, who received the Bowdoin Prize on September 25, was a memorable event. Those of us who were on hand will never forget that day. Classmates who attended were Brewster, Goodspeed, Harry Hinckley, Pennell, Stahl, O. H. Stanley, Stone, Sturtevant, Timberlake, and Rich.

The Harold Burtons were interviewed by Edward R. Murrow on his television program "Person to Person" on November 7.

An editorial in The Washington Post of October 8, entitled "Justice Burton Retires," praised the justice for having served "conscientiously and well. He has ably exemplified the tradition of judicial independence, and he has grown in stature during each year of his service."

1910 Secretary, E. Curtis Matthews

Walter Fuller has retired after forty-five years in the textile business with William Whitman Company, Inc. and Percy A. Legge. He has moved his permanent residence from Scarsdale, New York, to Southwest Harbor, Maine. His oldest son, Atherton Fuller, practices law in Ellsworth and is now Judge of Probate of Hancock County.

Clement F. Robinson '03 receives a Navy citation for his contributions over the years in rendering legal aid to Navy personnel in Maine and especially at the Brunswick Naval Air Station. His secretary reports that during one day, for example, he made two wills, drew up two powers of attorney, wrote a letter concerning a trailer rental and one involving an accident in Canada, and answered two requests over the telephone. He ordinarily receives no compensation for such services for military personnel.

Earlier this year Bill Ireland '16 was honored by the WALL STREET JOURNAL for "promoting good business and good business relations" in New England. As a token of the occasion and the citation, he is shown here receiving an unusual wood carving of himself, executed by skillful Finnish artists on klobbol wood.

Shirt Hathaway has been having quite a siege with a baffling ailment but is now on the mend. Son Russell heads his own business in New York, and son Richard now teaches at the Roberts School in Hartford after three years in Beirut, Lebanon.

Maurice Hill is "partly retired." He and Mrs. Hill live at 38 High Street, Portland.

Ed Leigh represented Bowdoin at the inauguration of Charles E. Odegaard as President of the University of Washington on November 7.

Henry and Marian Libby have returned to their Delray Beach home after a European trip.

Herbert Locke received a certificate of appreciation from the Maine State Bar Association when he retired as its President this year. He served from 1942 until this year, first as Secretary-Treasurer and then as President of the Association.

Dr. Roswell E. Hubbard '14, seated right, looks over the first and last babies he brought into Waterford during his 39 years as general practitioner in the area. At left is John H. Tyler, 38, the first baby, born in Waterford two months after Dr. Hubbard started his practice in the town, and center, Allen Adams Arnold, 18 months old.

Jesse McKenney has moved to 20800 Vose Street, Canoga Park, Calif.

Earle Maloney reports "six children and eighteen grandchildren." One of the latter, Earle III, was admitted to Bowdoin but accepted appointment to the U. S. Naval Academy.

As a former President, Seward Marsh represented the American Alumni Council at the inauguration of President Lloyd Elliott of the University of Maine on October 24.

Arnett Mitchell, who has been principal of Champion Junior High School in Columbus, Ohio, for 38 years, will retire next June.

Joe O'Neil's Chebeague summer was spent "entertaining grandchildren. Back to South Portland to recuperate."

Lyde and Ethel Pratt have now "retired for the second, and probably for the final, time." Next news may be that they are again residents of Maine.

Carl and Viola Skillin have been in the Carolina Smokies. They are now at Lakeland, Florida, 2238 East Lakeview Street, for the winter, looking for an escape from Vermont's rugged winters.

Don Weston is between the hay and grass of employment and retirement. His address is 1055 North Twenty-second Street, Allentown, Pa.

1913 Secretary, Luther G. Whittier

Chester Abbott is Chairman of the new Downtown Task Force of the Greater Portland Chamber of Commerce. The Task Force is undertaking a survey of 1,500 families to learn what shoppers like and don't like about shopping in Portland.

Chet, as Chairman of the New England Council's Bankers' Committee, convened the 28th annual New England Bank Management Conference in Boston on October 24.

Stanley Dole represented Bowdoin at the inauguration of Gordon Riethmiller as President of Olivet College in Olivet, Mich., on October 26.

Senator Paul Douglas has been elected to a six-year term as senator-at-large of Phi Beta Kappa. Paul was also the subject of a feature article in the December Reader's Digest, entitled "The Independent Gentleman from Illinois."

1914 Secretary, Alfred E. Gray
Francestown, N. H.

Ed's "equestrian interests" continue to occupy some of his time and attention. Since 1955 he has been President of the Lower Merion Society for the Detection and Prosecution of Horse Thieves and the Recovery of Stolen Horses. This famous old "Horse Company," founded in 1818, held its one hundred and fortieth annual dinner meeting at the Lower Merion High School on November 8. A saliva-starting menu of oysters (five different ways!) and roast turkey was accompanied by the music of Moyer's Dutch Band, a speech by a gentleman who has sold thoroughbred horses from coast to coast for sixty years, and the renditions of a baritone who offered "the songs men love to hear."

Professor Herbert Brown was the principal speaker at the annual meeting of the Lincoln-Sagadahoc Teachers' Association in Boothbay Harbor on October 31. He spoke on the future of education in the United States.

Professor Brown represented Bowdoin at the inauguration of K. Roald Bergethon as President of Lafayette College on October 18. He spoke to the Norway Women's Club on November 4, his subject being "Life and Letters in the Terrible Twenties."

President James Coles was the leader of a discussion group at a three-day conference of New England educators at Crawford Notch, N. H., during late September. The conference, entitled "Educational Reassessment of New England," was attended by about 130 invited representatives of colleges, universities, public and private secondary schools, and local and state education boards and departments. President Coles' group discussed "The Place of the College and University in the Reassessment Program."

The Worcester (Mass.) Sunday Telegram for October 12 carried a feature story on Professor Emeritus Manton Copeland and his collection of sewing birds. Entitled "Ever Seen a Sewing Bird?" the article tells how Dr. Copeland started twenty years ago to collect these interesting bits of antique Americana. (For those who have never seen a sewing bird, we quote Professor Copeland's description: "A sewing bird is a mechanical device, clamped on a sewing table, in popular use in New England around 1850, which held the material in its bill or beak while the seamstress stitched a garment. It was a third hand for the busy sewing lady. You might call it a cloth grasper.")

Professor Louis Coxé was the first speaker in the "Lectures in the Humanities" program presented by the University of Maine during 1958-59. He spoke on "Herman Melville and the Problem of Evil" at Orono on October 5.

Professor Coxé also delivered the informal remarks following the luncheon tendered James Bowdoin Scholars and invited guests at the Moulton Union on October 22.

Mrs. Amelia Walker Cushing, widow of Professor Morgan B. Cushing, died on November 18 at her home on Park Row following a long illness. Active for many years in the Red Cross and in Civil Defense during World War II, Mrs. Cushing appeared in many Masque and Gown productions. She was a graduate of Vassar College.

Subfreshmen Often Ask . . .

In their travels to schools, alumni meetings, and informal gatherings for sub-freshmen in the homes of alumni, members of the faculty and staff are often asked questions which vary little from one time and place to another. Alumni know the answers to many of these questions, but they may wish to have replies ready, no matter how elementary the query may seem. Here are some of the questions that are most frequently asked.

Where is Bowdoin located? It is in the town of Brunswick, a Maine community of about 16,000 people that was first settled in 1628. Only a few miles from the Atlantic Ocean, Brunswick is located on U. S. Route One and the main line of the Maine Central Railroad. It is thirty minutes from Portland (a city of 100,000) and only a little over two hours from Boston. Brunswick has a number of good stores and restaurants, as well as several hotels. It is an enterprising community that is in the process of building two new hospitals. The College itself is located on a slight rise of land in the residential section, a short walk from the main shopping and business district.

What is the size of Bowdoin? The present enrollment is about 800. The faculty to student ratio is about one to ten.

What does it cost to attend Bowdoin? This year an undergraduate pays $1,866 for tuition, room, board, and fees, and averages another $350 for spending money, incidentals, and recreation. It now costs a boy about $2,200 a year to attend Bowdoin.

How about scholarships? Bowdoin has a liberal scholarship program. Grants in 1958-59 will total about $250,000 and will be made to nearly one-third of the entire student body. Last September almost twenty-nine per cent of the entering freshmen held prematriculation scholarships, ranging in amount from $400 to $1,500, the average award being about equal to tuition, $1,050. These scholarships are awarded according to need and ability. A boy whose need continues and who continues to perform satisfactorily will have his grant renewed or adjusted, from year to year, to fit his fixed or changing circumstances.

Are there job opportunities at Bowdoin? Yes, there are. However, no arrangements or commitments are made before a student reaches the campus. After he has drawn up a class schedule, the student is in a position to know more about his free time. There is a staff member specifically in charge of job assignments. Each year the payroll for undergraduate job opportunities on campus totals about $50,000.

Do sons of alumni receive any special consideration? Yes. The folder for every son of an alumnus is reviewed completely by each member of the Committee on Admissions (the President, the Dean, the Director of Admissions, and five members of the teaching faculty), and the Committee votes on each case. Last spring forty out of fifty-one sons of alumni were accepted; twenty-eight matriculated in September.

How about "early admission"? Whenever a case is very clear, one way or the other, a boy is told that he need apply nowhere else—or that he should apply somewhere else. Each case settled in advance simplifies the overall picture. It is to Bowdoin's advantage to secure every applicant of superior ability as soon as possible. In many cases, though, it is impossible to determine a candidate's status until all the information on him is available well along in the second semester.

Does Bowdoin have an ROTC unit? Yes, the College and the Army cooperate to offer ROTC training to undergraduates who wish it. This gives them a chance to earn some extra money during the junior and senior years, and it provides for each successful trainee-graduate a second lieutenant's commission in the reserve. (Occasionally students elect to follow the Marine Platoon Leaders' program during undergraduate summers or to attend the Naval Officers' Candidate School at Newport, R. I., for ninety-day sessions following graduation.)

Are there fraternities at Bowdoin? Bowdoin has chapters of ten national and two local fraternities. Ninety-six percent of the undergraduates are members. Pledging occurs at the very beginning of the freshman year (which helps insure well-rounded groups and draws the new students into the social life immediately). Monthly dues are modest ($5-$8), and students pay the same room and board fee to the College whether they eat at the Union or at a fraternity house and whether they live in a dormitory or in a fraternity house.

Where do freshmen eat and sleep? At Bowdoin freshmen are not segregated. They must live in dormitories their first year, but every dormitory contains elements from each of the four classes. Freshmen take their meals at their respective fraternity houses as soon as they pledge. Independents eat at the Moulton Union.

What are Bowdoin's athletic facilities? The College has a fine gymnasium, cage, swimming pool, and covered hockey rink with artificial ice. Whittier Field, with the football gridiron and outdoor track, is located among the Bowdoin Pines. Nearby Pickard Field has a number of tennis courts, baseball diamonds, soccer and lacrosse fields, and practice areas, as well as the Pickard Field House. In addition to interfraternity athletics, the College sponsors teams in these intercollegiate sports: football, cross country, basketball, track, swimming, hockey, lacrosse, skiing, golf, tennis, baseball, soccer, and sailing.

What about music? The new Gibson Hall of Music is the center of the musical activities on campus. The principal musical organizations are the Glee Club, the Chapel Choir, and the Meddiebempsters (a well-known double quartet). There is also a band. Individuals have ample opportunity to use the Chapel organ and the practice facilities in Gibson Hall.

Does Bowdoin do anything with dramatics? Most certainly. The Masque and Gown is an active undergraduate group with headquarters in the new Pickard Theater, one of the finest collegiate theaters in the country. Major productions every year are complemented by a student one-act play contest and the annual Shakespearean presentation in June.

How about speech and debate? Two members of the English department devote full time to speech work. Bowdoin debaters have had wonderful success in recent years, both individually and as teams. Numerous contests take place throughout the year, both on and off campus, including a lively interfraternity debating tournament.

Where are the nearest girls' colleges? Bates and Colby, both co-educational, are within an hour's drive. Westbrook Junior College in Portland is thirty minutes from the campus. And many girls' colleges in the Greater Boston area are only a little over two hours from Brunswick by train or auto.

What are the regulations about automobiles? Freshmen may not have cars at Bowdoin. A student in the upper three classes may have a car, provided (1) it is registered with the Dean, (2) the student is not holding a scholarship, and (3) the student is not on probation.

(These are a few of the typical questions which subfreshmen ask. Many others, especially those regarding courses and requirements, are best answered by the College Catalogue. A prospective student or interested alumnus should not hesitate, however, to direct further questions to the Director of Admissions.)

You Are Bowdoin

Alice Duer Miller once wrote — "Don't ever dare to take your college as a matter of course — because many people you'll never know anything about have broken their hearts to get it for you."

A Bowdoin education is much more than the sum of the courses and papers any one of us may have completed. It is much more than the degree we may or may not have received. A Bowdoin education is also the association with other students, in the classroom and outside. It is the discussions in the dormitory, at the fraternity house, in the Union, at the Library, covering many subjects.

A Bowdoin education is also the opportunity to browse and read in the Library regardless of course assignments. It is the chance to associate, talk, and even argue with scholars and teachers in a variety of fields.

No Bowdoin man has ever paid more than about half of what it costs to educate him. How can an alumnus repay this moral obligation? In many ways — by giving to the Alumni Fund every year, by making capital gifts if he is able to, by serving the College generously and gladly in any way he can, by directing good boys to Bowdoin — by being, simply, a son of Bowdoin. Without you Bowdoin is less than it is with you. Whatever you do, wherever you are, and wherever you go, you, for other people, are Bowdoin College.

Perhaps it is saying too much to state that Bowdoin would shut its doors were the Alumni Fund to cease operations. It is not, however, saying too much to state without reservation that Bowdoin could not continue to be the college it is today if the Fund and all it stands for and is a symbol of were to go out of existence.

If an alumnus casually shrugs off Bowdoin's need as unimportant if true, then he in the long run is the loser, for, consciously or unconsciously, he is losing faith in himself and in what he must once have believed in. To be sure, Bowdoin loses too, for it in some measure has failed in its responsibility to impart to this individual even the overall idea of a liberal arts education.

And yet, Bowdoin's failure in this responsibility cannot rest upon the shoulders of the College alone. For the individual himself is not guaranteed a liberal arts education in the best and finest and truest sense of this much-used term. He is given the opportunity to become friends with all that is best in the history of the world's civilization. What he does with this opportunity is largely determined by himself alone.

THE COVER

Although there is no identification on the back of the picture which was used for the cover of this issue, it seems reasonably safe to assume that it is a Stephen E. Merrill '35 product. At least, it is very much in the Merrill tradition of Bowdoin winter scenes. Taken from just to the south of the northern lion at the Walker Art Building, it shows the tracks made, presumably, by some anonymous undergraduate who was saving a few steps some winters ago.

C. Nelson Corey '39

is the new head coach of football at Bowdoin, succeeding Adam Walsh, who resigned in October after twenty seasons at the helm of the Polar Bears.

COREY was relieved of his duties as head coach of hockey following a Christmas vacation tournament at Ithaca, N. Y. He is continuing to teach classes in physical education during the winter and will also coach lacrosse during the spring.

A native of Lynn, Mass., Corey prepared at Governor Dummer Academy in South Byfield, Mass., and was graduated from Bowdoin in 1939. He was for three years a standout tackle on Adam Walsh's early football teams, was captain of the team his senior year, and was twice selected for All-Maine honors. He was also named to the All-New England hockey team as a goalie and played first base on the baseball team. He won nine varsity letters at Bowdoin, three each in football, hockey, and baseball, was president of his class and of Delta Upsilon fraternity, and served for three years on the Student Council. He did his major work in mathematics.

Following his graduation in 1939 he coached football, baseball, and basketball and taught at the Pomfret School in Connecticut for three years before entering the Navy. After three years as a Navy lieutenant, with 25 months' service in the South Pacific, he coached and taught for a year at Governor Dummer and then joined the faculty at Maine Central Institute in Pittsfield.

In 1949 Corey became head hockey coach and football line coach at Colby College. He was appointed head football coach at Colby in 1951 but after a year in that position resigned to return to Maine Central Institute, where he served as dean of boys, taught mathematics, and continued to coach football. His teams won four straight Maine preparatory school championships, in 1948, 1949, 1952, and 1953.

During 1954-55 he coached freshman football and hockey at Williams College, where his football team won the Little Three championship and his hockey squad was undefeated. He returned to Bowdoin in 1955 as line coach in football and freshman coach in hockey and baseball. Two years later he was named varsity hockey coach. He has also coached lacrosse for the past two seasons.

Corey holds a master of education degree from Boston University. He is married to the former Kathleen Ann Monaghan of Gardiner, a 1943 graduate of Colby, who also has a master's degree from B.U. They have two sons, Charles Nelson III and Jeffrey Stephen.

Director of Athletics Mal Morrell '24 has this to say about the appointment of Corey as head coach —

"I made my recommendation of Nels Corey to President Coles for many reasons. He understands the modern game of football thoroughly and has a keen desire further to improve that knowledge. He has outstanding ability as a teacher. He has the capacity for hard work and enjoys hard work. He has remarkable qualities of leadership and character.

"In short, this is a man whom I have known and observed for more than twenty years, and there are many other factors too numerous to mention here that help account for my belief in him. To me, it would have been unwise to go outside and make an appointment based largely on recommendations and accomplishments established under different conditions, when we have a man on our own staff who had already clearly demonstrated his outstanding ability under conditions that exist here.

"I know Nels to be an outstanding coach. He can be extremely demanding and insist on 100% effort and performance and still be liked by the boys on his squads. He has the ability to watch practice or a game and see who is doing his job and who is not. This ability, and only a few have it, makes it possible for such a coach to make changes during the progress of a contest that may easily affect the result. He demands and gets more from a boy, in many cases, than the boy himself ever dreamed that he could accomplish. These qualities made Jack Magee a great track coach.

"I feel sure that Nels Corey can and will produce a football team next fall of which all Bowdoin men can be proud. I did not know that about any other candidate, and there were more than 50."

PORTLAND EVENING EXPRESS for December 29, 1958.

Brennan Fired, Corey Hired

One common conclusion can be drawn from the firing of Coach Terry Brennan at Notre Dame and the hiring of Nelson Corey at Bowdoin:

Alumni like a victorious football team.

Here endeth the comparison, however, for there is a world of difference between the emphasis placed on football at the Indiana university and the Maine college.

There is a note of the pathetic in what happened to Brennan. In the first place college authorities did not have the courtesy to tell him why he was bounced. And second, as Brennan pointed out himself, the year in which they decided to act was one in which he won a majority of his games (6-4) rather than three years ago when he lost eight and won two.

The manner in which the affair was handled is further evidence that a strong faction of Notre Dame alumni seem more concerned with football glory than with academic glory. It is the sort of emphasis which does not do the reputation of a university any good, and hence it was not surprising that so many adverse comments came from newspaper editors and sports figures across the land.

Bowdoin alumni, too, like to win, a statement which could be made of any collegiate alumni group. But it should be noted that former Coach Adam Walsh enjoyed popularity and confidence during his more disastrous years. He was allowed to resign in a dignified manner, and there were no shallow or devious attempts on the part of the Bowdoin administration to disguise the fact that a stretch of defeats had something to do with his departure.

To Bowdoin's great credit, one of the reasons for its losing football teams is that it sticks to strict rules about recruiting. Football victories are not the ultimate mission of the college, a circumstance under which it is bound to have some lean years on the gridiron.

In Nelson Corey Bowdoin has a coach of proven ability, of fine leadership qualifications and plenty of that intangible asset known as "the old college try." We wish him luck as Bowdoin attempts to recoup its lost stature on the gridiron.

Come victory or defeat, Coach Corey, a Bowdoin alumnus, can have pride in the fact that his college consistently ranks among the top schools in the nation academically.

A Fearless and Honest Search for Truth

Members of the Bowdoin Faculty have adopted resolutions in which they urge amendment of the National Defense Education Act by the removal of a section which requires participants under the Act to execute a so-called "disclaimer affidavit" and oath, believing it to be an infringement upon academic freedom. The action was taken at a regular meeting of the Faculty in adopting a report of a special committee to study the affidavit and oath provisions of the National Defense Education Act of 1958. Announcement of this action was made by President James S. Coles on January 20.

The Faculty believe that the requirement of the affidavit would mean that in place of "a fearless and honest search for truth, and a vigorous dissemination of the fruits of research, there will begin to appear in educational institutions, among both students and teachers, a feeling of hesitancy and fear and a consequent restriction on the free inquiry and association that are the heart of academic freedom." They also point out, in reference to the oath, that to require such an oath is the right of the government, and allegiance is a "necessary accompaniment of citizenship."

The resolution stating the position of the Faculty follows:

WHEREAS, the National Defense Education Act of 1958 forbids any payments to a participant unless such individual first has executed an affidavit concerning his beliefs and associations and has taken an oath of allegiance, and,

WHEREAS, we, the faculty of Bowdoin College, believe the requirement of the affidavit to be harmful to academic freedom and to the interests of education in a democratic society, and,

WHEREAS, the oath, in its form unexceptionable, is in this context useless in uncovering subversion, and invidious in its connotation, and,

WHEREAS, our reasons for holding these views are set forth in the "Statement of Bowdoin Faculty" attached to and made a part of this resolution, and,

WHEREAS, we believe it our duty as responsible members of a college faculty in a free society to make known our views,

BE IT RESOLVED THAT: We strongly urge that the National Defense Education Act of 1958 be amended to remove Section 1001(f) of Title X.

The "Statement" incorporated as part of this resolution follows:

"We, the faculty of Bowdoin College, strongly object to the affidavit requirement on the following grounds:

"First, it will restrict the exercise of academic freedom by both students and teachers. This effect arises because the affidavit constitutes an inquiry into belief and association and because its meaning is extremely vague. No objective criteria are given for identifying the organizations alluded to, and what constitutes support is not specified. In these circumstances, the signer is acquiescing in a largely unknown commitment, and such vagueness might be construed as a blanket rejection of participation in any organized activity that might now or someday fall under suspicion. Not only is the requirement that a person pledge to conduct himself by such vague standards, with criminal liability attaching to violations, a denial of due process of law, but its imposition will cause some persons who have signed to be intimidated. In place of a fearless and honest search for truth, and a vigorous dissemination of the fruits of research, there will begin to appear in educational institutions, among both students and teachers, a feeling of hesitancy and fear and a consequent restriction on the free inquiry and association that are the heart of academic freedom.

"Second, the affidavit requirement should be removed on the grounds that it is of very dubious constitutionality in the light of the U. S. Supreme Court's decision in Wieman v. Updegraff (73 S. Ct. 215) in which the Oklahoma teachers' oath was declared unconstitutional because of its vagueness.

"Third, the requirement of an affidavit is useless because subversives will not hesitate to sign, with the result that such affidavits become debased in the eyes of loyal citizens who also sign. Moreover, to direct this requirement specifically at teachers and young people who are students at institutions of higher learning is invidious, implying that these persons are members of a suspect group.

"The requirement of the oath in the National Defense Education Act seems to us to present completely different problems. Allegiance is a necessary accompaniment of citizenship. The usual form for the expression of such allegiance is by oath. The oath in the National Defense Education Act is such an oath in its traditional form. To require such an oath is the right of the government. We believe, however, that it is useless and invidious to require it on this occasion, useless because disloyalty is not eliminated by formalities, and invidious since it selects the beneficiaries of government assistance in one area and not in others. We therefore believe that the Act would be strengthened by the elimination of the oath requirement."

The relevant portion of the National Defense Education Act, Section 1001(f) of Title X, reads as follows:

"No part of any funds appropriated or otherwise made available for expenditure under authority of this Act shall be used to make payments or loans to any individual unless such individual (1) has executed and filed with the Commissioner an affidavit that he does not believe in, and is not a member of and does not support any organization that believes in or teaches, the overthrow of the United States Government by force or violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods, and (2) has taken and subscribed to an oath or affirmation in the following form: 'I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America and will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States against all its enemies, foreign and domestic.' The provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code, shall be applicable with respect to such affidavits."

The following statement was issued jointly on the same day — January 20 — by President Coles, President Charles F. Phillips of Bates College, and President J. Seelye Bixler of Colby College —

"The faculties and administrations of Bates, Bowdoin, and Colby Colleges are in agreement that the disclaimer affidavit provision in Section 1001(f), Title X, of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 constitutes a serious threat to academic freedom. They join in urging Congress to eliminate this provision of the Act at the earliest opportunity."

Think Before You Vote — But Vote

By Maj. Gen. Wallace C. Philoon '05, USA, Rtd.

Editor's Note: This article has been written by direction of the Board of Overseers for the purpose of stimulating greater alumni interest in electing members of the Board and a substantially larger vote for alumni candidates. At the present time there are no vacancies to be filled, but this article is timely because it deals with a matter of vital alumni interest.

The College Charter gives the Board of Overseers full power "to fill up all vacancies in the said Corporation of Overseers, by electing such persons for Overseers as they shall judge best qualified therefor. . . ." Under the present agreement with the Alumni Council alumni are asked to select a man for alternate vacancies as they occur on the Board of Overseers. This plan appears to be satisfactory to all concerned. The Board of Overseers are concerned not with the alumni selections themselves but with the apparent need for better understanding by many alumni of the importance of their ballot and of the process of selection so that when balloting takes place there will be greater participation by alumni. Readers of the ALUMNUS may recall the following statement which appeared in the August 1958 issue —

"Bowdoin men continue generally to let their representatives be chosen by the other fellow. Of 7726 ballots mailed last spring only 1776 were returned."

Experience has demonstrated that under this democratic process it is possible for a relatively small number of voting alumni to determine the outcome of a "popular" nomination. Last spring a new Overseer might have been selected by the votes of less than 8% of the alumni. The Board of Overseers believe that this is not a desirable condition and strongly urge more alumni to exercise their franchise in the selection of their candidate who will become an Overseer. In this connection it may be noted that members selected and elected by the Board of Overseers — also alternately — can be chosen only when a quorum or one-third of the membership is present. The Charter of the College defines a quorum of the Overseers as 15 members of a body that "shall never be greater than forty-five nor less than twenty-five." In practice, when new members are chosen, upwards of 75% of the membership are generally present and voting. Every Overseer feels that this election is one of his most important duties; hence it is but natural that they look for a greater interest by the alumni in general.

What are the qualifications of a good Overseer? When members of the Board prepare for an election, it is customary to examine the characteristics of the present board members along with qualifications of the many names under consideration, such as age, geographical location, business and professional experience, demonstrated interest in the College, participation in alumni activities, and so forth.

As to age — in stating the essentials of a good college, President Hyde once said: "Governing Boards which retain old men but select young men to fill vacancies, combining wisdom and experience with initiative and progress."

As to geographical distribution — a wide coverage geographically, avoidance of becoming localized, but appreciating the necessity of having members able to attend meetings of and serve faithfully on the Board and its committees. Last year the homes of members were distributed as follows: Maine 19; New York 8; Massachusetts 3; Delaware 2; New Hampshire 2; District of Columbia 2; Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, California, and Illinois 1 each.

A well-balanced choice of business and professional men is desirable. Last year these groupings were as follows: Business and Industry 15; Law 8; Banking 4; Public Life 5; Medicine 3; Education 2; Clergy 2; Military and Publishing 1 each.

As to personal qualifications — a former Overseer, who served the Board and the College with distinction for many years, enumerated these as the most desirable qualifications for a new member:

"First — A nominee (be he in the upper or lower age group) should be successful above average in his chosen business or profession — a man fully capable of contributing good counsel on the many problems of the College which require good reasoning and sound judgment.

"Second — He should preferably have a broad acquaintance among men of affairs and influence because of the gain to the College which is likely to come from such connections. It is well to speak of this matter openly, rather than by inference.

"Third — He should be willing and able to devote considerable time to the affairs of the College on committee work and otherwise. Election to the Board of Overseers of Bowdoin College is by no means merely an honor. It calls for real work and helpful thinking.

"Fourth — If he be young, he should nevertheless be mature. And if he be in the higher age bracket, he should be young enough to give many years of active service in the college work required by the position."

The choice of Overseers of Bowdoin College is so important that it is hoped that more alumni will be alert to their opportunities and responsibilities when they vote for men to become members of this important corporate body of their alma mater.

Honorary Chief Journalist Shulman

"Outstanding public service in the field of journalism" brought veteran Brunswick newsman Harry G. Shulman, known to hundreds of Bowdoin men, an honorary rating as a chief journalist in the United States Navy on November 21.

In a surprise ceremony during the regular monthly inspection, Captain Frank R. More, USN, commanding officer of the Brunswick Naval Air Station, presented to Harry a mahogany-framed citation against a red velvet background. Enclosed with the citation were the badge of a chief petty officer, journalist, USN, and the official emblem of the Air Station.

Harry had turned out early, after one of his typically busy nights covering accidents, fires, and so forth, for what he thought was routine coverage of the final inspection by Commander Daniel Decker, administrative officer of the station.

After photographing Commander Decker, he was summoned to Captain More's side at the public address microphone in Hangar 3. Camera in hand, he stood waiting — and puzzled — until Captain More began to read the surprise citation, as follows:

"It is with a great sense of pride and personal satisfaction that I convey to you the heartfelt gratitude and appreciation of the U. S. Naval Air Station, Brunswick, Maine, for the outstanding public service which you have performed in the field of journalism.

"As a newspaper correspondent with many years of wide and varied experience, your efforts to transmit to the public a complete and factual coverage of the activities of the Naval Air Station have been of inestimable value in helping the Navy to establish the fine community relations it now enjoys within the local area.

"Whatever the nature of the story to be written or picture to be taken, your willingness to fulfill the station's requests for coverage, despite the disruption in your personal schedule, is indicative of the high calibre of performance for which you are being honored today.

"As a goodwill ambassador for the Navy with your mechanical instruments, a typewriter and a camera, the untold good which you have accomplished cannot be measured in terms of words alone. I am certain that your relationships established through the many years of contact with the service personnel of the Naval Air Station, Brunswick, Maine, will always be cherished memories.

"Because of the aforementioned characteristics which are symbolic of your inspirational relationship with the Naval Air Station, we bestow and enthrone you with the noble position of Honorary Chief Journalist.

"With the awarding of this small token of our deep and lasting gratitude, may you take with you our sincerest best wishes for your continued success, health, and happiness."

A fitting tribute for Harry to put with the many other satisfactions — both tangible and intangible — which he has earned and richly deserved in his many years of public service.

And speaking of years, earlier this winter Harry discovered to his surprise that he is apparently some 11 months older than he had always been led to believe. So he will never have a 51st birthday; instead he will go from the 50th which he has already celebrated to his 52nd.

On The Campus

The Bowdoin Debating Council has announced plans for a ten-day tour during spring vacation. President Coles, the Admissions Office, and the Alumni Office are supporting a program for bringing a group of four Bowdoin students into a number of communities and schools in the New England and Middle Atlantic states. The group will present exhibition debates for alumni gatherings, high school and preparatory school assemblies, Rotary Clubs, Parent-Teachers' Associations, and other interested organizations. The purposes are several: to show alumni what undergraduates are doing and thinking, to introduce more people (particularly subfreshmen) to Bowdoin, and to allow these prize-winning Bowdoin debaters to appear before new and different audiences.

From Tuesday, March 17, to Thursday, March 19, the debaters hope to appear in Boston, Hartford, and New Haven. Following appearances on Long Island and a weekend debate tournament in New York City, they plan to proceed to Washington and then work their way north, debating before audiences in Washington, Baltimore, Wilmington, Philadelphia, and communities in northern New Jersey. Their topic is that which has faced the recent Geneva Conference, the banning of further development of atomic weapons by international agreement.

The project is of special significance in that it recognizes the fact that the students themselves can play a more active and formal role in helping introduce Bowdoin to the public. The Debating Council hopes that the tour will be of real benefit to the College.

Bowdoin debaters continue to win honors in tournament competition. On December 6 Bowdoin tied for second place among twenty-seven competing teams at Tufts University. And on December 13 four novice debaters tied for first place among eighteen contesting colleges in a tournament at St. Anselm's College. At the end of this third tournament of the year, Bowdoin had an overall record of thirty-one wins out of thirty-six debates.

Football Co-Captains

Guard Joe Carven of Weymouth, Mass., and halfback Bob Hawkes of Danvers, Mass., have been elected co-captains of the 1959 varsity football team. They succeed fullback Gene Waters of Westbrook.

Both Carven and Hawkes played between 50 and 55 minutes per game throughout the past season. Carven, the starting left guard, was one of the defensive standouts on the squad, making dozens of tackles in every game. A graduate of Weymouth High School, he entered Bowdoin as the recipient of an Alumni Fund Scholarship.

Hawkes too came to the College with an Alumni Fund Scholarship. He was the starting left halfback and was Bowdoin's high scorer with 36 points. He was second within the state to Colby's Pete Cavari in pass receiving, with 20 completions for 324 yards. In addition he picked up 232 yards in 72 carries for an average per attempt of 3.22 yards. He is a graduate of Holton High School in Danvers.

Summer Institutes

Approximately 200 high school and preparatory school teachers of biology, chemistry, mathematics, and physics will study at Bowdoin next summer under four separate National Science Foundation grants totaling more than $175,000. These grants will finance four summer institutes, which will be under the direction of four members of the Bowdoin faculty. Professor Alton H. Gustafson will be in charge of the biology program, Professor Samuel E. Kamerling the chemistry institute, Professor Dan E. Christie '37 the mathematics group, and Professor Noel C. Little '17 the physics institute.

The 200 teachers will be in residence at the College for six weeks, from June 29 until August 8. Many of them will be accompanied by their wives and children. Each participating teacher will have his tuition paid by the grant and will also receive a living allowance of $75 a week. Additional allowances are also provided for up to four dependents. This stipend is given in lieu of summer earnings the teacher might otherwise be able to make.

The four main objectives of the institutes are as follows: 1. to improve the subject matter competence of the participating teachers; 2. to strengthen the capacity of these teachers for motivating able students to consider careers in science; 3. to bring these teachers into personal contact with the prominent scientists who will make up the staffs of the institutes, with a view to stimulating their interest and increasing their professional prestige; and 4. to effect greater mutual understanding and appreciation of each other's teaching problems among science teachers at both the secondary school and college levels.

"While Bowdoin is happy to contribute to the success of the National Science Foundation's program in the sciences,"

1959 co-captain Bob Hawkes

1959 co-captain Joe Carven

President Coles has said, "it also recognizes that there should be programs in other areas of intellectual endeavor organized in a similar fashion. The National Defense Education Act of 1958 provides for these areas in part, but funds for support of programs in the humanities are not available in any large degree."

A Report On Russia

Former CBS Moscow correspondent Paul K. Niven jr. '46 lectured at the College under the auspices of the Student Council on December 15. In a lively talk he exploded certain myths and popular misconceptions about Russia and her leaders and told his audience, in sobering terms, of the Soviet threats as he viewed them. Mr. Niven was ordered to close the CBS news bureau in Moscow and to leave the country last October when the Russians took umbrage at "a number of anti-Soviet" radio and television programs, especially the television play "The Plot to Kill Stalin," which was presented on September 25. He is now with the CBS bureau in Washington, D. C.

Gustafson Wins Grant

Professor Alton H. Gustafson, Chairman of the Department of Biology, will carry on research in genetics at the University of California in Berkeley next year under a Science Faculty Fellowship grant from the National Science Foundation.

The award to Dr. Gustafson is the only one made in Maine this year. Throughout the country 302 fellowships were granted. They are offered as a means of improving the teaching of science, mathematics, and engineering in American colleges and universities.

The Ranks Thin

"Mike the Hot Dog Man" died on December 31 following a short illness. A traditional figure at Topsham Fair and Bowdoin athletic events, he operated a stand on Maine Street for nearly 35 years. Evangelos Michael Koucoules, or "Mike," was a native of Athens, Greece, came to this country as a young man, lived for a time in Bangor, and moved to Brunswick following Army service in World War I. He was known to practically every Bowdoin man and Brunswick resident for three and one-half decades.

Frank M. Courson jr., 52, janitor in Hubbard Hall for three years, died suddenly on January 13. Always interested in nature and wildlife, he was a protege of Professor Alfred O. Gross and had a private museum at his home on McLellan Street.

Mr. Courson helped organize the recently formed Sagadahoc Museum of Natural History and was one of its trustees. A Junior Audubon Club was started last fall under his leadership, and he led its members on numerous field trips. He also served as treasurer of the Maine Audubon Society and had contributed several articles to nature magazines.

Watson Coaching Hockey

Sid Watson, former Northeastern University hockey and football star, is coaching the varsity hockey squad during the rest of the current season, having taken over the reins from Nels Corey '39 in late December. Both Corey and Watson accompanied the team to an invitational tournament at Ithaca, N. Y., from January 1 to 3.

Sid Watson

Watson, who was selected a defenseman on the All-New England hockey team while he was playing for Northeastern, has played four seasons of professional football. For three years he held a backfield position with the Pittsburgh Steelers and spent the 1958 season with the Washington Redskins. He has also played semi-pro hockey since his graduation.

A native of North Andover, Mass., where he attended Punchard High School, Watson was graduated from Northeastern in 1955. Now 26, he is married and has four children, ranging in age from four years to three months.

Award For Walsh

Retired football coach Adam Walsh received a special award at the eighth annual Bangor Daily News Sports Award Dinner, held on January 17. Already named to the News Hall of Fame in 1953, following Bowdoin's last State Series title, Adam received a watch, the inscription on which, "for lifelong service and contribution to intercollegiate football," was particularly apt for a man who has devoted a good part of his life to the game.

Another Honor For Herbie

Professor Herbert Ross Brown received the Annual Award in Literature of The New England Society in the City of New York at the Society's 153rd anniversary dinner at the Plaza Hotel on December 4. Edward M. Fuller '28, President of the Society, presided at the dinner, which paid tribute to the State of Maine. Professor Brown and Senator Edmund S. Muskie H'57 were scheduled as guests of honor, but Senator Muskie's plane was grounded by bad weather, and Professor Brown was in the spotlight alone.

A number of Bowdoin men living in New York City were special guests of the Society. They saw Professor Brown receive a silver cigarette box inscribed with the words, "For Contributions to New England Literature and Education." This 1958-59 award came at an appropriate time — this is Dr. Brown's fifteenth year as Managing Editor of the New England Quarterly.

It is interesting to note that the New England Society's first literary award was made in 1952 to Professor Wilmot B. Mitchell '90, who served as Edward Little Professor of Rhetoric and Oratory for more than forty years and retired in 1939. His successor in that chair is Professor Brown.

Winter Lectures

Professor Reinhard L. Korgen gave a talk, illustrated by color slides, in the Pickard Theater on December 4. His remarks were based on his experiences of last spring when he and his family spent a sabbatical leave in Scandinavia and he taught at the Technical University of Denmark in Copenhagen under a Fulbright grant.

The first weeks of January found three outside lecturers at the College. Dr. Kirtley F. Mather, retired professor of geology at Harvard University, gave a talk at the Moulton Union on January 6 entitled "The New World in the Making." On January 8 Dr. Carl J. Friedrich, winner of the $5,000 Greater Boston Contest and a professor of government at Harvard University for more than thirty years, spoke on "Inevitable Peace" at the Union. Dr. J. Allen Hynek, Associate Director of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory in Cambridge, Mass., spoke in the Pickard Theater on January 15, taking as his subject "Man's Satellites, Doorways to Space."

Bowdoin was the scene of a "scoop" when Dr. Hynek announced that the Vanguard "grapefruit" satellite had been photographed for the first time, less than a week before his appearance in Brunswick. The small satellite was traveling at about 900 miles high at a speed of nearly five miles a second when it was pictured by a giant Baker-Nunn tracking camera. Bowdoin and Brunswick were prominently featured in newspaper accounts of this feat all over the country.

The Oakes Center at Bar Harbor will be the location of another Speech Workshop for Teachers from June 29 to August 7. Professor Albert R. Thayer '22 will direct this session, as he did the initial one last summer.

Four special lectures have been announced for the session. On July 6 Dr. Louise Bates Ames will talk on "A Biological Approach to the Study of Personality." Professor James M. Moulton will speak on "Animal Sounds of the Sea" on July 16. On July 23 Professor Norman L. Munn will discuss "The Growth of Language," and on July 30 President James S. Coles will give an address entitled "Education in an Advancing Complexity."

New Armament

Motorists driving past the College on Route One during the week of January 12 were startled to notice Bowdoin's new armament. During that time a large, menacing-looking M-47 tank was parked next to Rhodes Hall, just in front of the ROTC Armory and clearly visible from the highway. The tank, brought to the campus for instructional purposes by the ROTC unit, was used primarily by Captain Harvey B. Johns, Assistant Professor of Military Science and Tactics, in his weapons instruction classes.

A Present For Peanut

On December 16 Bowdoin undergraduates, faculty, and staff members presented more than $300 to Ellis F. Marriner of Topsham, for many years stock room man at the Sargent Gymnasium. He had just returned home from the Maine Medical Center, where he had been a patient for some weeks.

When Mr. Marriner, who is known as "Peanut" to Bowdoin men, entered the hospital, members of the football team, led by Captain Gene Waters '59, and members of the White Key, decided to raise money to help him meet his medical expenses.

Peanut's friends will be happy to know that he has now returned to his duties with the Athletic Department, far in advance of earlier predictions.

The Oxford Tradition

The Oxford Paper Company has made a major change in its annual scholarship competition, under which two high school seniors receive awards valued at $2,400 each.

In the past the scholarships had been given only to men entering the College of Technology at the University of Maine. This requirement has now been changed so that one of the two grants may now be made for a course in liberal arts, business administration, or education, to be pursued at Bowdoin, Bates, Colby, or Maine.

Commenting on this change, President James S. Coles said, "This broadening of the Oxford Paper Company Scholarship Program in a sense recognizes the importance of the liberal arts, an importance further attested by the fact that a large majority of business executives — indeed, better than 70% — are graduates of small liberal arts colleges.

"Further, this demonstrates the mutuality of interests of the American free enterprise system and the American system of independent higher education. The history of free enterprise parallels to a remarkable degree the strengthening of these colleges and universities.

"The Oxford Paper Company continues to be in the forefront of those companies which give generously to the support of higher education. This latest step is an example of company leadership completely in the Oxford tradition."

A Christmas Program

The Art and Music Departments at Bowdoin joined on the evening of December 16 to present a Christmas art exhibit and a concert by the Bowdoin Chapel Choir in the Walker Art Building. The program included lessons and carols by the Chapel Choir, under the direction of Professor Robert K. Beckwith. Professor Athern P. Daggett '25 was the reader. The audience joined the Chapel Choir in singing traditional Christmas carols throughout the evening. The Christmas exhibit of art works and the decorations at the Walker Art Building were arranged by Professor and Mrs. Carl N. Schmalz.

Orient Elections

Jon S. Brightman '60 of Lakeville, Conn., has been named Editor-in-Chief of The Bowdoin Orient, to serve during the spring semester. He succeeds Roland L. O'Neal '59 of North Conway, N. H.

In other changes in the staff of the Orient Guy B. Davis '59 of Toledo, Ohio, has become a member of the editorial board, as have A. Thomas Lindsay '60 of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and W. Stephen Piper '62 of Worcester, Mass. Daniel G. Calder '60 of Lewiston remains on the board.

Alfred E. Schretter '59 of Florham Park, N. J., continues as Business Manager, a post he assumed several months ago.

Masque And Gown

Daniel G. Calder '60 of Lewiston has been elected President of the Masque and Gown. He will serve until the annual election in January of 1960. Other officers elected are as follows: Secretary, Floyd B. Barbour '60, Washington, D. C.; Production Adviser, Edward T. Groder '60, Darien, Conn.; Senior Member at Large, Jon S. Brightman '60, Lakeville, Conn.; Production Manager, Jesse C. Leatherwood '61, Fairfax, Ala.; Business Manager, Peter C. Haskell '61, Moosup, Conn.; Publicity Manager, Joseph P. Frary '61, Farmington; Junior Member at Large, Nicholas E. Monsour '61, Bethel Park, Pa.; Librarian, Nicholas G. Spicer '60, Farmington, Mich.

On December 12 the Masque and Gown presented a dramatic reading of George Bernard Shaw's The Apple Cart. My 3 Angels was the Winter Houseparty production on February 5, 7, and 9. The student-written-acted-and-produced one-act plays will be presented on March 12, and the faculty will give performances of Molière's The Misanthrope on April 2 and 3.

Professor George Quinby '23 reports that several previous winners of the one-act play contest have promised to return in March to judge this year's twenty-fifth anniversary presentations.

Interclass Competition

The Class of 1960 won the annual interclass indoor track meet on December 13 with 49 points. In an extremely close meet the seniors finished second with 39, the sophomores third with 38 1/3, and the freshmen fourth with 36 2/3. Captain Larry Wilkins '59 led the scorers with 16 points, based on firsts in both hurdles events and the 300 yard run plus a fourth in the 40.

Winter Sports

In general, the varsity squads have found their winter schedules tough going, while the freshmen have done consistently well. Through the end of the first semester, on January 31, the various varsities — in hockey, basketball, swimming, and track — had won five contests, lost 25, and tied one. The freshmen, on the other hand, had a mark of 14 wins and only two losses.

The varsity hockey squad, coached through December by Nels Corey '39 and since then by Sid Watson, has a 3-8-1 mark, having defeated Merrimack, Tufts, and M.I.T. and tied a strong Hamilton team.

The freshman skaters, coached by Dan MacFayden, have defeated Hingham High, Swampscott High, the University of New Hampshire freshmen, St. Dom's of Lewiston, and Phillips Andover, while losing to a strong Colby freshman outfit 6-2. According to MacFayden, "This is an outstanding group of hockey players and in another year they will help the varsity squad tremendously." He feels that by the time defenseman Don Jelly of Danvers, Mass., graduates he will probably have become Bowdoin's best hockey player in his memory. Ron Famiglietti of Walpole, Mass., he says, is as good right now as Stubby King '51 was eight to ten years ago, and he predicts that the front line of Famiglietti, Newt Stowell of Dixfield, and Kenny Bacon of Belmont, Mass., has the potential to become the best Polar Bear line of all time.

It is a pleasure to watch the freshmen play. They have shown constant improvement, particularly in their passing

The Reardon Trophy honors a former Bowdoin football star, named to the All-Maine team in 1949 as a center, who died last April. A regulation-size silver football standing on a rubbed mahogany base, it has been given by members of the Reardon family and college and business friends. A small replica of the trophy will be presented each year to a senior on the varsity football team who has made "an outstanding contribution to his team and his college as a man of honor, courage, and ability." He must be held in respect on the campus as well as on the football field.

Bob Donham's varsity basketball squad has but one victory — an upset over a strong Rutgers quintet at the Downeast Classic in Bangor — in 15 starts. But here again the freshmen, coached by Ed Coombs '42, look good. Playing an entirely different yearling schedule, they are undefeated through their first five games, with victories over the M.I.T. freshmen, the Bates Jayvees, the University of Maine in Portland, Maine Central Institute, and Phillips Andover Academy.

In previous years the freshmen played a schedule made up for the most part of Maine high school teams. This year's opponents include, in addition to those listed above, Hebron, the Maine and Colby freshmen, and Phillips Exeter. The bulk of the scoring so far has been done by Ed Callahan of Peabody, Mass., Gregg Giese of Scarsdale, N. Y., Mike Buckley of Portland, Conn., Bill Cohen of Bangor, Tom Prior of Summit, N. J., and Pat O'Brien of Lowell, Mass. Cohen hit a high of 39 points against the UMP team.

In its only dual meet competition during the first semester Frank Sabasteanski's varsity track squad lost to Boston College on January 31 by a score of 71 to 51. At the same time the freshmen defeated the B.C. freshmen 60 to 42.

Earlier in the season the first-year men defeated Deering and Portland High Schools in a triangular meet.

Bob Miller's varsity swimming team lost to M.I.T. and Amherst and then defeated Trinity 47 to 38. His freshman squad has defeated Brunswick High School twice and lost once to a perennially strong Portland High team.

The ski team finished a strong third in the intermediate championships in Vermont late in January, behind Maine and Harvard.

Elected For Life

On December 1 and 2, following time-honored tradition, the Junior Class elected its permanent officers. Two of 1960's three leaders are former Alumni Fund Scholars, as well as varsity football stars: President Robert L. Hawkes of Danvers, Mass., and Vice President Terrance J. Sheehan of Gardiner. Richard H. Downes of Haverhill, Mass., was elected Secretary-Treasurer.

Reprints Available

Last February President J. Seelye Bixler of Colby College delivered the Annie Talbot Cole Lecture at Bowdoin. His subject was "The Existentialists and William James." His talk was printed in the winter, 1958-59, issue of The Ameri- can Scholar. The College has secured a limited number of reprints, which are available to interested alumni. If you would like a copy, write to Mr. Philip S. Wilder, Assistant to the President, Massachusetts Hall.

Education Conference

Nearly seventy-five teachers, public school administrators, and state education officials gathered at Bowdoin on January 19 for a meeting on "Maine Schools and the Maine Economy." It was sponsored by the New England School Development Council. There were two speakers at the meeting: Dr. James A. Storer, Associate Professor of Economics at Bowdoin and Director of the Maine College-Community Research Program, who spoke on "Some Basic Facts about the Maine Economy," and Dr. Charles S. Benson, lecturer at the Harvard University Graduate School of Education, who discussed "The Economics of Education." These afternoon lectures were followed by a dinner at the Moulton Union and then a general discussion of the local Maine community, its schools, and the problems of money.

Trustee Elections

Two Portland men were elected to important posts at the midwinter meetings of the Governing Boards, held January 30 and 31. Harold L. Berry of the Class of 1901 was named Vice President of the Board of Trustees, succeeding the late Hoyt A. Moore '95 of New York City, and Charles W. Allen '34 is the new Treasurer of the College, succeeding the late Roland E. Clark '01 of Portland. He is also an ex-officio member of the Board of Trustees.

A native of Portland and a member of the Board of Trustees since 1937, Mr. Berry previously had served for sixteen years on the Board of Overseers. He has been a member of every building committee at the College since 1927 and is presently a member of the Executive Committee, the Visiting Committee, and the Committee on the Planning of Buildings, among others.

He is a senior vice president of Canal National Bank in Portland and was for many years president of the Portland Savings Bank. He is also a director of the West End Realty Company, J. B. Brown & Sons, P. H. & J. M. Brown Company, and the John Marshall Brown Company. For many years following his graduation in 1901 he was treasurer of the A. H. Berry Company and was later its president.

Mr. Berry was awarded an honorary master of arts degree by Bowdoin in 1931. The citation read at that time said, in part, "... chairman of the original committee that started the Alumni Fund . . . generous, unselfish, held in deep affection by his classmates and friends. . . ."

Mr. Allen, who was elected a member-at-large of the Alumni Council in 1957, is a partner in the Portland law firm of Hutchinson, Pierce, Atwood & Allen. A member of the Cumberland County, Maine, and American Bar Associations, he is a director of the Rockland-Rockport Lime Company and has served as chairman of the Portland Civil Service Commission. He is also treasurer and a trustee of Hebron Academy and a trustee of the Portland Savings Bank.

A native of Portland and a graduate of Deering High School, Mr. Allen was captain of the track team and president of the Student Council at Bowdoin. In 1937 he received a doctor of jurisprudence degree from the University of Michigan Law School. For the next four years he was associated with the New York law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell before entering the United States Navy. He served as executive officer on the U. S. Acorn Seven in the South Pacific and was discharged as a lieutenant commander in 1945.

AROOSTOOK

About 25 alumni gathered at the Caribou Hotel in Caribou on December 16. Their guests were six subfreshmen and their fathers, as well as the principal and the guidance counsellor from Caribou High School.

President Nat Barker '29 presided. Following dinner Director of Admissions Bill Shaw '36 showed a group of color slides and commented on them. His general remarks were succeeded by a question and answer period, during which the subfreshmen, their parents, and area alumni were brought up to date on the latest events at the College and various aspects of admissions at Bowdoin.

BOSTON

During January several subfreshmen meetings were held by alumni of the Greater Boston area in their homes. These small, informal gatherings were in Weston and Stoneham and on the North Shore and the South Shore. Interest has been good, and local alumni, subfreshman prospects, and the Admissions Office are all enthusiastic about the results.

On February 28, the Bowdoin Club of Boston will hold a ladies' night at the Woodland Golf Club in Auburndale. Special guests will be President Coles, who will report on the state of the College, and Carl de Suze '38, who will present his popular illustrated talk, "Come to the Fair," based on pictures and impressions which he gathered in Europe last summer.

"Bowdoin Night at the Pops" is set for Thursday, May 14.

CHICAGO

The Bowdoin Club of Chicago held an informal luncheon meeting on December 30. Professor George Quinby '23 was the special guest, and the local alumni who attended were Jay Sheesley '23, Harold Fish '25, Walter Herrick '31, Arthur Fox '35, Dan Callahan '41, George Hutchings '43, Joe Woods '47, Don Buckingham '53, and Tom Dwight '54. An informal question and answer period was held in Jay Sheesley's office following the luncheon.

On January 15 Director of Admissions Hubert Shaw '36 met a group of 20 alumni for an informal dinner at the Fred Harvey Restaurant. Following the meal there was an extended, informal discussion of Bowdoin admissions as well as ways in which Chicago alumni might help interest local boys in applying to Bowdoin.

CLEVELAND

The Bowdoin Club of Cleveland held an informal luncheon at the Midday Club on November 28. About a dozen alumni and one subfreshman were present. Recent-graduate Pete Relic '58 and Alumni Office representative Pete Barnard '50 brought everyone up to date on current campus doings. Council Member Ollie Emerson '49 called for ideas and comments on the Alumni Council's plans for an Alumni House.

On December 22 a dozen alumni met at the University Club to entertain ten subfreshmen and their fathers. Following a social hour and dinner, color slides of the campus were shown and commentary was supplied by Pete Relic '58. Club President Dick Woods '37 led an informal discussion, during which the subfreshmen and their fathers were able to learn more about the College.

Plans are now going forward for an evening meeting with Dean Kendrick on Wednesday, March 25.

CONNECTICUT

The officers and the Executive Committee of the Bowdoin Club of Connecticut gathered at the home of Ben Whitcomb '30 for an informal meeting on December 11. After discussing ideas about a proposed Alumni House at the College, they turned to the main business of the evening.

About ten subfreshmen from the area were guests. Pete Barnard '50 of the Alumni Office staff showed a series of colored slides of the campus and undergraduate activities. He then answered the subfreshmen's questions about Bowdoin and discussed the matter of admissions with these prospects and also with the alumni who were present.

DETROIT

On January 10 forty-five alumni, wives, and guests gathered at the Veteran's Memorial Building in Detroit for a social hour and dinner. President Coles was the special guest from the campus. He showed color slides of the College and commented informally on current happenings at Bowdoin. Elections were held with the result that Stanley Dole jr. '47 is President, and William Barney jr. '43 is Secretary-Treasurer.

KNOX-LINCOLN-WALDO

Professor Edwin Benjamin '37, Student Council President John Bird '59 (son of Club President Frederic Bird '30), and Eugene Waters '59, President of the Senior Class and Captain of the 1958 varsity football team, were guests of the Knox-Lincoln-Waldo Bowdoin Club on November 14. Alumni and their subfreshman guests gathered at the Knox Hotel in Thomaston for a social hour and dinner. The three representatives from the campus spoke informally following the meal.

MILWAUKEE

Richard Lamport '32 organized a meeting of Bowdoin men in Milwaukee and the surrounding area on January 9. The group's special guest was President Coles, who showed color slides of the campus and commented on the general state of the College.

The 30 people who gathered at the University Club to meet President Coles were alumni, wives, local schoolmen, and several subfreshmen. A number of alumni have indicated an interest in having more meetings in the Milwaukee area.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

The Bowdoin Club of New Hampshire held its fall meeting on November 14 at the New Hampshire Highway Hotel in Concord. About 35 alumni attended a social hour at six and a dinner at seven. Ten subfreshmen were special guests of the club.

After discussion of the proposed Alumni House at the College, Director of Admissions Bill Shaw '36 and Coach Nels Corey '39 spoke informally on current campus happenings.

NEW YORK

About 35 alumni met informally at the Gramatan Hotel in Bronxville on November 18. President Ben Shute '31 called the meeting to order around 7:30.

Director of Admissions Bill Shaw '36, the principal speaker of the evening, gave a fact-filled account of the present-day admissions situation, both in general terms and with specific reference to Bowdoin. He told about the great help given the College and the Admissions Office by a number of interested, informed alumni and spoke of plans to expand such alumni help and participation. Pete Barnard '50 also made a few remarks, particularly about what various alumni groups are doing to interest subfreshmen candidates. He outlined what he hoped to accomplish in two trips he was then beginning for the Admissions and Alumni Offices.

Refreshments were served during a long and lively question and answer period, which ended around eleven o'clock, although a few alumni lingered to talk to the campus visitors and among themselves.

NORTH SHORE

The North Shore Bowdoin Club held its fall dinner meeting at the Hawthorne Hotel in Salem on November 19. About 65 alumni and wives attended.

Two faculty members were special guests of the group. Professor Reinhard Korgen showed his color slides taken in 1954 during his Arctic trip with Admiral Donald MacMillan '98 aboard the schooner Bowdoin. He, in turn, introduced Professor James Storer, who talked about current campus happenings and the nature of the present-day student at Bowdoin.

PORTLAND

The Bowdoin Club of Portland has begun holding regular luncheons at twelve noon on the first Wednesday of every month at the Cumberland Club. Because accommodations are limited to 30 or 40, alumni interested in attending are asked to make their reservations with H. Davison (Dave) Osgood '53 at his Canal National Bank office (SPrice 2-1941) at least one week in advance.

Professor Edwin Benjamin '37 represented the College at the initial gathering on December 3. He discussed current campus happenings. Assistant Director of Admissions Robert Glover '56, the group's second guest on January 7, talked about Bowdoin admissions. On February 1 Professor Philip Bean was the luncheon speaker, and on March 1 Professor James Storer will address the group. Vice President Bela Norton '18 is scheduled to discuss the Development Program at Bowdoin on April 1, and Professor LeRoy Greason will talk about Bowdoin's four summer institutes on May 6.

ST. LOUIS

At a dinner meeting at Schneithorst's Restaurant on January 8 President Coles visited alumni and wives in the St. Louis area. Ten alumni and some of their wives attended the meeting: Dr. Herman Dyer '10, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Warren '26, Jack Goldman '37, Fred Morecombe '13, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Philoon '45, Earl Rosen '45, Johnson Poor '49, George Schenck '50, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Cason '53, and Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Rule '58. As a result of elections, Fred Morecombe is the new Convener and Council Member.

ST. PETERSBURG

Convener Charles "Doc" Lincoln '91 reports that 18 showed up for the December luncheon, the largest turnout in a long time. Those present were Fessenden '95, Carmichael '97, Marston '99, Haley '07, Webster '10, Brummett '11, Emerson '11, Pope '11, Redfern '11, Barbour '12, Skillin '12, Conant '13, Kennedy '13, Fogg M'14, Mooers '18, Cockburn '25, and the Convener. A special guest was Mr. Beal, a University of Maine graduate.

On January 15 the St. Petersburg group gathered for their third luncheon of the season. Sixteen were present, including a 1920 graduate of Dartmouth, Mr. C. E. Anlis. Bowdoin men at the luncheon were Convener Lincoln '91, Fessenden '95, Carmichael '97, Marston '99, Packard '04, Haley '07, Newman '09, Webster '10, Brummett '11, Pope '11, Redfern '11, Fogg M'14, Tarbox '14, Mooers '18, and Cockburn '25.

WORCESTER

Secretary Cloyd Small '20 reports that the Bowdoin Club of Worcester held its fall meeting in the Megaron of Worcester Academy on November 24. President Ivan Spear '44 greeted a group of 65, including alumni, schoolmen, subfreshmen, and parents of undergraduates and subfreshmen.

Director of Admissions Hubert Shaw '36 showed color slides of the campus and told about life at the College. A comprehensive question and answer period ensued, during which subfreshmen, parents, and alumni asked about various aspects of admissions and Bowdoin in general. Several alumni lingered for an informal session.

Worcester-area alumni joined local Smith alumnae to attend a combined Bowdoin-Smith Glee Club concert at Worcester Academy on December 5. Members of the Glee Club and local alumni were entertained by Headmaster William Piper '31 following the concert.

Bowdoin Browsing

This "Browsing" column has been written by Robert E. Dysinger '44, Assistant Librarian at Bowdoin since September of 1957. A graduate of Bethlehem Central High School in Delmar, N. Y., he served during World War II as a radio operator-gunner on a B-24 plane and took part in 34 missions over Europe. He returned to Bowdoin after the war and received his degree, with honors in history, in 1946.

After a year spent as a newspaper reporter and an advertising copy writer, Mr. Dysinger studied from 1947 to 1949 at the University of Michigan and received a master of arts degree. He was a psychological counselor in Albany, N. Y., and an English teacher at New Gloucester High School before entering New York State College for Teachers' Library School in 1954. The following June he received a master of science in library science degree and went to Colby as a reference librarian.

Mrs. Gereth in The Spoils of Poynton had, she admitted, "a proneness to be rendered unhappy by the presence of the dreadful." She was referring, of course, to the aesthetically dreadful, and that which could be seen with the human eye. The browser among books should, it seems to me, be equally vulnerable — to bad taste in writing. To me, at least, this is more a matter of the manner of writing than of the subject of the writing. In this browsing column I refer to some recent novels by Europeans which, far from "dreadful," are, rather, of fine taste — regardless of their respective subject matters.

Sebastian Dangerfield is the most delightfully thoroughgoing cad I have met in some time. He is the protagonist in a new novel by J. P. Donleavy. With very few apparent qualms Mr. Dangerfield is faithless to his wife and child, is a drunkard, a spendthrift, a liar, a robber, and a near-murderer. J. P.

Donleavy in his humorous, picaresque novel The Ginger Man, published two years ago in England and last year here, has written a work of verve, beauty, and originality. Donleavy has bright poetic gifts. The language of the book is clean and disturbing, the figures full drawn, rich, and very fallible. It is a book you can surely live with afterward — and wake up at night chuckling about, too, for that matter.

Lolita, Vladimir Nabokov's presently best-selling treatise about a gentleman whose sexual desires are slightly off the norm, is certainly a number of things. Nabokov, who in a postscript to Lolita maintains that his deep personal tragedy is that of having to substitute a surely second-class brand of English for his hearty, mature, and idiomatic Russian, protests too much. Few writers in English, born to the language or not, have Nabokov's dexterity with a phrase; few can so faultlessly evoke the perfect word. Lolita, though professedly a bit of erotica, actually seldom is. It is much more a belly-shaking lampoon of our mores and institutions. It is, incidentally, it seems to me, an excellent portrait of a psychically disturbed individual. Are humor, satire, erotica, and serious portraiture incompatible? I think not. There are faults in the book, of course. First, it is just too long, and second, having started to be satirical about our stupidities, Nabokov reins up, rather than driving as hard as he might.

Much better is his more recent Pnin, which has many of the same elements. Professor Pnin is one of the most satisfying characters in fiction. At odds with America through nothing at all but his inherent ineptitude, he is as surely at sea as is the gentleman in Lolita. With a brush of keen humor Nabokov creates the atmosphere of craft and inability, of ambition and pretense, of the American college — and does it again in his deft and telling style. Pnin deserves to be better known.

Nabokov's Dozen, a recent collection of Mr. Nabokov's short stories, again has the perfectly controlled, precise, and unique language. The stories themselves exhibit his habit of creeping up on the point — from behind. One that stands out in my memory is a tender, delightful story of childhood, "First Love," full of grace notes and echoes that conjure up the pasts among which every man lives. The volume is a valuable gathering-together of fugitive Nabokov pieces.

The Girl Beneath the Lion by Andre Pieyre de Mandiargues is the first publication in the United States of the work of a well-known young French writer. It is an unusual novel, a hymn to nature, to the glory of awakening sexuality in a girl of perhaps eighteen. Poetic, sensuous, mystical, it is, on the surface, as evocative to the senses as Ravel's Bolero. The work cannot be viewed realistically, in the sense of the everyday world. The plot is highly improbable; the central figure of the girl is a vehicle only, a most effective method of vitalizing this poem. Pieyre de Mandiargues has written a mystical song of nature, romantic, sensuous, fragrant as a flower.

Very impressive is Ignazio Silone's The Secret of Luca, a deceptively simply told story of love and tragedy among the mountain peasants of the Abruzzi in Italy. Silone's major concern is with human character, with the unbreakable spirit of man, and with the alchemy such spirit can work on even the most bleakly pretentious and material person.

Finally, in a second novel of Italy, Roger Vailland's The Law, there is created a stark, seamy portrait of sexual decadence and the struggle for survival in southern Italy, a country which apparently is amazingly suited to illustrating Vailland's theory that to the ruthless and powerful comes the best in life.

Evidences Of The Massachusetts Hall Cupola

By Roger Howell jr. '58

Recent interest in the restoration of Massachusetts Hall, oldest existing building on the Bowdoin campus, has brought with it a number of interesting problems. The chief of these problems concerns the cupola which apparently once adorned the top of the building. Considerable confusion has arisen over the cupola, extending beyond doubt about its shape and size to doubt of its very existence.

Examination by the college architects of the existing beams in the roof of Massachusetts Hall has apparently failed to uncover anything definite about the nature of the cupola. Actually such examination has even failed to determine whether the cupola existed. But such a condition should not be assumed to prove that the structure never was there. There have been so many alterations to the building since its initial construction that even in its outward form it does not look much like the original. Greater suspicion has been aroused by the one source which would apparently determine the nature of the cupola, the famous print of the College dated in various years from 1821 to 1823. This somewhat paradoxical situation is due to several factors. In the first place, the multiplicity of dates for an identical view of the College seems strange. Of the three "different" views I have seen, the only difference is in the color of one doorway; it appears white in two of the views, dark in the other, certainly a minor difference. The composition of all three is the same, even down to the treatment of animals in the prints.

The chief doubt has been raised by a passage in Little's Historical Sketch of the College, which was published in 1894. He wrote (p. 38): "the belfry that then adorned it (Massachusetts Hall) was removed when the old chapel was enlarged in 1818." Yet in these views of the College, none dated earlier than three years after this, the structure on top of Massachusetts Hall, which Mr. Little referred to as "the belfry," is plainly visible along with the enlarged chapel. The discrepancy here casts doubt on the value of the views as a source of proof. This doubt is heightened by an investigation of the records of the Trustees up to 1822, for no mention is made of a cupola on Massachusetts Hall even though such things as the laying of planks from the College to the chapel are carefully noted (October 23, 1805).

A problem of this sort seemed to have only one solution — a careful examination of the college records on Massachusetts Hall from the founding of Bowdoin until the 1840's. The latter date was chosen because by then another view of the College had been made showing the building without a cupola. It would seem safe to conclude before starting that, if no mention could be found by that time, there was never a cupola on Massachusetts Hall and that the 1821-1823 view of the College was a fanciful recreation from the artist's memory.

On July 18, 1796, the Trustees of the College met in Brunswick "to agree upon a spot in the town of Brunswick whereon to erect suitable buildings for the College." The following day they voted to erect a structure of brick one hundred feet long, forty feet wide, and four stories high with a cellar. This was agreed to by the Overseers, but by the following May it had become apparent that such a building would be "very expensive and probably not be completed (sic) for some years to come." It was accordingly voted to erect immediately a house for the president forty-eight feet in length and thirty-eight feet wide. The Overseers would not agree to such a plan, but "a Committee of Conference on the erection of a building" was formed. They, unfortunately, recommended a building of the same proportions making only the minor refinement that it was to be of wood. Again the plan was rejected. It was not until November 7, 1797, that agreement was reached. On that day it was voted "that a brick building be erected fifty feet by forty, three stories high with a cellar under the whole for the President's House and to accommodate a few students before the College is erected."

Although $2400 was appropriated for the construction, difficulties arose almost immediately. Financial troubles made it impossible for the treasurer to pay this sum. On the twentieth of May, 1801, the records note that the agent chosen to finish the building "should cause it to be completed in a plain manner according to the finishing of Hollis Hall (Cambridge) and that he should make all his contracts both for labor and materials for payment in cash only in order that the building may be finished in the cheapest manner." On the fourth of November following, further modifications were made, but on September 1, 1802, the building was finished enough that the Trustees met at "the College House" and at that time voted to name it Massachusetts Hall. In the years that followed until 1818, there are mentions of further construction and renovation on the building, but there is no mention of any cupola. The existence of the cupola was beginning to appear somewhat doubtful until the first break in the research was made in the entry for May 19, 1818. On that day it was voted to remove the college bell from the roof of Massachusetts Hall and to attach it to the chapel. It was further voted to fit the chapel with a "tower" to receive the bell. This entry indicated two things. In the first place, the sentence in Little's Historical Sketch which mentioned removal of a belfry from the top of Massachusetts Hall on this date was not accurate as only the bell was removed. In the second place, it did not seem especially far-fetched to imagine that, if a tower was necessary to receive the bell on the chapel, a tower of some sort might also have been necessary on Massachusetts Hall. This was still scant ground for asserting that the cupola had existed in view of the complete lack of any other evidence outside of the views of the College.

Between 1818 and 1830 there are further references to construction on the building, but none of them shed any light on the problem of the cupola. But on August 31, 1830, a passage was written into the records of the Trustees which provided the conclusive piece of evidence. On that day it was voted "that a sum not exceeding sixty dollars be appropriated to new shingle Massachusetts Hall and to remove the cupola on the same." A check of the records well past the predetermined terminal date of 1840 failed to show any further references to a cupola, so it can be safely assumed that the removal was effected without difficulty. It does seem somewhat strange that there should be only this one mention of the cupola in the records, but this mention alone seems to be sufficient proof of its existence, and, when coupled with the conjectures made about the entry for May 19, 1818, it seems conclusive.

The second major problem of what the cupola looked like still remains. It does not seem to be solvable on the basis of the information in the records. The views of the College should also probably not be taken too literally. While they seem true in their major outward aspects, there is still enough of a tinge of doubt about them to render them somewhat dubious sources. The cupola may have been exactly as it is pictured there; more likely, it was similar to what is pictured. The problem of constructing a suitable cupola for Massachusetts Hall would seem to rest almost solely at the discretion of the college architects.

MELVIN T. COPELAND, And Mark an Era. The Story of the Harvard Business School: Little Brown & Co., 1958; pp. 312; $6.00.

The Harvard Business School celebrated its 50th anniversary in 1958. Fortunately for the School, Melvin T. Copeland, Bowdoin 1906, took the occasion to tell its story from the vantage point of a lifetime of service on its faculty, from which he retired in 1953. For over forty years he played an important part under three deans in shaping the character and destinies of the Business School. Hence, he could speak with a knowledge possessed by no other living man regarding the development of education for business at Harvard, from a halting, uncertain beginning to its present strong position among the professional Schools of the University.

While the study is full of reference to the people who played important roles in the history of the School, emphasis, so far as personalities are concerned, has been placed primarily upon the three Deans, Gay, Donham, and David, under whom Copeland served and to whose administrative leadership the growth in size and prestige of the School is in large measure due. The value of the book rests not so much in Copeland's putting down for posterity anecdotes and appraisal of the actors in the School's history, interesting though these are, as in his recording and appraising what was done by a group of educators in pioneering a professional school in a field new to education. Copeland calls his work a "case study" of an educational venture. It is a study of educational ideas, of bold and imaginative educational administration, and of pioneering in curricular development. His recording and appraisal may well be looked upon as a contribution to the history of education.

The idea of establishing a school to teach business at Harvard at the turn of the century met with little academic or business support, yet those who guided Harvard's destinies in the first decade had the vision to see the need for professional education for business. An ever-increasing number of college graduates were going into business. Business was becoming more complex, its organizations larger, and its management increasingly separated from ownership.

The concept of a school of business, such as has evolved, was set forth with almost prophetic vision in a letter from A. Lawrence Lowell to Professor Taussig, who was chairman of the committee considering the establishment of a School for Public and Private Business. Lowell expressed the conviction that there was opportunity for success, if not a department, but a separate school with a separate faculty were established "whose object would be purely to train men for their careers, as the Law and Medical schools do." He called attention to the fact that the Harvard Law School taught its students, not jurisprudence, but how to be practicing lawyers. In turn, he said, "we must take men without regard to what they have studied in College, and we must teach them business, not political economy."

The School started on a modest scale, indeed, with a monetary backing of only $25,000 a year for a five-year period. The first class had 21 regular students. The faculty faced the difficult task of determining what should be taught, for the field was virgin.

"Doc" Copeland unfolds the story. First came the decade of groundwork under Dean Gay, during which the faculty had to learn how to provide instruction in business administration. The Bureau of Business Research was established, and the factual approach upon which instruction has rested came into being. Here was started the reciprocal influence between the School and business which has been constantly enlarged.

There follows the record of the great expansion in research, curricular development, size of School, and influence under the dynamic leadership of Deans Donham and David. The School grew until now it has six separate educational programs and a student body of some 1700 men. The tradition firmly established under the three deans was that of continuous experiment and trial of new ideas.

To Copeland the most impressive aspect of the venture is that "a great University with the highest scholastic traditions had the vision to see the need for professional education for business, and the courage to undertake to bridge the gap between the scholarly world and the world of trade." The many unsolved problems are indicated, particularly the need for continuing effort on how best to utilize and teach in a school of administration the developments in other disciplines of significance to business. It is clear that business education is still in a pioneering stage. Fifty years is a short time in the development of any field.

NEIL H. BORDEN

JOHN LOUIS DARBELNET and JEAN-PAUL VINAY, Stylistique Comparée du Français et de l'Anglais; Méthode de Traduction; Didier, Paris, and Beauchemin, Montréal, 1958; pp. 331; 1800 francs, $5.00.

This distinguished volume is the first of a series in French entitled the Bibliothèque de Stylistique Comparée, under the general editorship of A. Malblanc. The Stylistique Comparée du Français et de l'Anglais is a textbook, but that catch-all term requires further explanation here. The basis of the work is the principles and methods of Saussure and Bally, developed with a wide range of reference to later French and English studies in linguistics. In the course of classification and analysis, the authors offer refinements on earlier models and move on to make their own contributions to the field. We have here the work of scholars who have a grasp of the French and English languages through living in and observing both worlds. In addition, their experience of life in Canada has made them peculiarly alert to the problems of a mixed zone, where linguistic colors tend to run together, just as they do in an uncertain translation.

The first aim of Messrs. Darbelnet and Vinay is to place French-English translation in a frame of linguistics. There is an introductory section which offers a glossary of terms, followed by detailed and systematic exposition of the principles of linguistic analysis and methods of translation. The techniques of analysis are next applied in a meticulous and organized way to a comparison of French and English in sections devoted to (I) Lexique (Vocabulary), (II) Agencement (Syntax), and (III) Message (Totality of Meaning). With each section, areas of comparison are increasingly complex. A useful appendix offers French-English and English-French texts annotated in accordance with the method that has been developed. There is an excellent selective bibliography. In addition, it would be helpful to have an index of examples.

The book will find a natural public among advanced students and professional translators, French and English-speaking alike. The Stylistique Comparée is, of course, unabashedly technical; it demands of those who turn to it a willingness to master linguistic terminology. But translation is a rigorous discipline, as its authors point out, and its practitioners need precision tools.

It is with a sense of form and dramatic demonstration that Messrs. Darbelnet and Vinay conclude their presentation by challenging the argument of that celebrated writer and translator, André Gide. They are able to show that Gide in his "Lettre sur les Traductions" is caught, like our students, in the false dilemma of the "free translation" (good) opposed to the "literal translation" (bad). The real distinction that must be made is between the exact and the inexact translation. Agreed! What Gide fuddles as "cheating" they have demonstrated to be legitimate techniques for rendering one language into another. In defense of Gide it must be said that his preoccupation is with the achievement of high style in the great translation, which must ideally match its model and attain the agreeable as well as the useful. But Messrs. Darbelnet and Vinay are rightly impatient with translators who defend their blunders and incoherence in the name of art. They insist that the translator first learn his craft. It is a formula good for any artist.

It would be a disservice to the Stylistique Comparée to imply that its authors confine themselves to painstaking linguistic masonry. They are convinced that translation is a technique of investigation, that comparison is a key to understanding the characteristics of a language and the essential character of a people. They quote with approval J. G. Weightman: "I often feel that anthropologists, by making a careful comparison of the languages of Dover and Calais, could long ago have discovered truths that they only brought to light recently by going all the way to the South Sea Islands."

The authors offer examples of the preference of English-speaking peoples for the familiar, the concrete, and the dynamic; that of the French for the formal, the abstract, and the static. So "airlift" becomes pont aérien. I note with the pleasure of recognition the French tendency to employ a learned word in contrast to the simpler English choice: concours hippique for "horse show"; empreintes digitales for "fingerprints"; eau potable for "drinking water." Hence, I suppose, that tone of a philosopher people that echoes through French speech. I am reminded of the explanation I was once given in France concerning the high cost of zipper repair. As a French specialist in that minor art handed me my overnight bag, its zipper now better than new, she remarked, "Vous savez, monsieur, *pour le profane ça n'a l'air de rien!"

In method and scope the Darbelnet-Vinay work seems to be alone in its field in France. It can make a real contribution in the development of translators in English and French who will know what they are about. It is understandable, therefore, that immediately upon publication the Stylistique Comparée has come to the attention of teachers at the Sorbonne, where it is to be used in the training of students who have completed their baccalauréat.

JEFFREY J. CARRE

MILTON M. GORDON, Social Class in American Sociology: Duke University Press, 1958; pp. xiii, 281; $6.00.

What are the chances of "getting ahead" in the United States? Is America a middle class society? Or a classless society? A generation ago the answers to such questions were provided by ideology or the "American dream." Although the idealization of competition implied inequality of rewards, there was little interest even among professional scholars in investigating in detail the ways in which prestige, wealth, and power tend to vary concomitantly, to be mutually convertible, and to be transmitted from one generation to another. The whole topic seemed somehow undemocratic. Even today the claim is occasionally heard that America is a classless society.

All this has changed in the years since the First World War. Numerous studies, beginning in the middle 1920's, have documented the existence of an American class structure and described its characteristics with ever-increasing precision. In recent years research in this field has grown so voluminous that much important work is bound to escape the attention of all but the most devoted specialist. Professor Gordon has set himself the task of summarizing, systematizing, and critically analyzing this literature. He has succeeded admirably.

The ecological studies of the 'twenties which showed unexpected regularities in the spatial distribution of a variety of social characteristics provide a starting point, followed by the Lynds' classic investigations of "Middletown," Warner's studies of "Yankee City," and monographs dealing with the pseudonymous communities of "Jonesville," "Plainville," "Southerntown," et al. While the number of identifiable social classes varies, friendship patterns, organization memberships, marriages, styles of life, and a long list of other characteristics clearly tend to cluster in distinctive arrays which are hierarchically related to one another. Both the similarities and the differences among widely separated communities have been well documented.

One of the most interesting conclusions drawn from these studies is the importance of the double handicapping to which lower class children are subjected — they start off life at a lower initial position, and they are systematically, although unconsciously, discriminated against by the social institutions which provide channels for upward mobility. Thus the chances that a lower class child will complete his education are drastically lower than the chances of a middle or upper class child of comparable ability, even when economic factors are excluded from consideration. Culturally acquired behavior patterns militate effectively against success. The waste of critically needed talent is apparent.

Closely related is the controversial question of whether or not opportunities for upward mobility are declining. The answer is yes and no. There has been a significant decline in the average improvement between first job and last job in the average career. Particularly important has been the growing practice of recruiting management above the rank of foreman from outside the plant rather than from among the workers. The level of foreman thus has come to constitute a ceiling on the aspirations of the individual worker. This has doubtless been a major factor in the successful appeal for collective action made by labor unions.

On the other hand, if we compare inter-generational mobility (e.g., son's highest job with father's highest job), we find no evidence of a decline in upward movement. The net result is that more and more mobility takes place before the individual even enters the labor force, less and less after he takes his first job. The road from "rags to riches" no longer is so much hard work, but education. We may readily note the effect of this on attitudes toward both hard work and education.

Professor Gordon has written a book which is comprehensive, careful, and incisive. In doing so he has performed an important service for every serious student of American social structure. I shall conclude this review by quoting his tribute to a former member of the Bowdoin faculty, Dr. Elbridge Sibley. "The high standards of scholarship which he set and displayed personally while a teacher at Bowdoin College made such an impression on this then undergraduate that he has since attempted to follow them. Whatever the success of his efforts, this occasion allows a former pupil to express publicly what (it is of sociological interest to note) can hardly be said privately and directly without embarrassment." In the judgment of this reviewer, the scholarship displayed in this volume is the worthiest of tributes to the teacher and the author.

LEIGHTON VAN NORT

LOUIS O. COXE, The Wilderness and Other Poems: University of Minnesota Press, 1958; pp. 68; $2.50.

This is Professor Coxé's third volume of verse, a slim book that is thick with meaning. In some ways it is an advantage not to be a friend of the poet: this allows one to find the man and his ideas in the poems themselves without having the curse-blessing of fitting an analysis to a preconceived notion of the man or of writing it with an eye to friendship rather than to honesty. Mr. Coxé and I have only a nodding acquaintance up to now. Perhaps my remarks will lead to more than nodding.

When first I dipped into these poems, I thought I might have made a mistake. Some were obviously good, but some were real puzzlers. (If one doesn't understand certain poetry, he can always shout "Obscurity!" and run for cover, but that isn't necessarily a true analysis.) Further consideration and rereading of this verse leads me to believe that most of it is quite good; these poems bear up under return visits because they are thought-provoking and interesting. I look forward to reading more of Mr. Coxé's poetry.

A careful examination of some of these lyrics lets the reader know that the poet is part of his surroundings. Present-day Brunswick and its environs find reflection in these poems. There is the seashore (Casco Bay and Seguin Light), the near-by Naval Air Station (jets and radar search planes), and even the Maine Central Railroad (complete with diesel and an overpass—perhaps the one on Federal Street).

This is not regional verse, however. This is thoughtful, thought-provoking poetry. It is not "entertaining" (in the worst sense of the word), but it is stimulating. The poet projects ideas, suggestions, and questions about Life: fate and will, age and youth, death, materialism, love, and even the aloneness of childhood. As should be the case, the poetry is not encumbered by form or pattern. The poet uses both rhyme and free verse, and often he writes four- and five-stanza lyrics (usually four or six lines to the stanza), but he never allows an artificial edifice to obscure his ideas and meanings.

Nevertheless, this is poetry. It stands the acid test—it can be read aloud and enjoyed. It is musical and it is somewhat different. Mr. Coxé, obviously well aware that the artist's use of language is one of the most interesting aspects of poetry, is not afraid of a "lapstraked boat," "weather-stripping," or a "driveway," things one does not ordinarily look for in a poem. He is intrigued by "vector" and "diesel." Some of his images are really first-rate: "The eye sinks higher in a well of blue" . . . "We hear of dying like the sea in shells" . . . "paddlers pumping like a clockwork toy" . . . "we pluck for attention at the shift of truth" . . . and "Autumn sighed a last and western breath."

Several lyrics in this collection continue to elude me, I must confess, which may be because the poet is occasionally too vague and obscure. Perhaps I am at fault. Not content to be stymied, I intend to keep after these poems to see if I can unravel them.

On a more positive note, I must recommend several of these verses for special attention: "The Old Ones," "Watching Bird," "Fall of Leaf," and "Between Worlds." Particularly pleasing and evocative is "For My Son's Birthday," a note on generations and continuity, a remembrance of things past, a hope for the future.

"The Wilderness," a long narrative poem, comprises the last third of this volume. Narrative poetry is written less often today than it was formerly, but Mr. Coxé has done a fine job of writing fresh, modern free verse to tell an old and somewhat didactic tale. Two Jesuit priests, Duclos and Rouville, are given missionary assignments to Indians of northern Maine and southern Canada. French Indians are set against English Indians. Missionary zeal encompasses not only Christianity but empire, as well. One sees that the end does not justify the means. Duclos is cast in the major role, and because Mr. Coxe knows that a story without a deeper meaning is an uncultivated plot, he sees the whole episode as another chance for man to make a choice and then reap the harvest. The poem is musical and free-flowing; the reader is never really conscious of the poetic form. As is proper, he is concerned with the story and the ideas it carries with it. He may find Mr. Coxe singing both alpha and omega, for the opening lines of the poem can be both a prologue and an epilogue:

Men in their times shape towards a
visioned end;
Moving to stars, transistors, shapes of dreams
Or shuddering to three crows on the wind,
They are blessed by priests. And as a whimpering child
Will tug one corner of his mother's dress
Till the whole garment hangs awry, so we Pluck for attention at the shift of truth—
Seeking no image of the world seen whole,
Only a corner lit by vision, dream,
By fire of self alight with its desire.

PETER C. BARNARD

CHARLES MERGENDAHL, The Bramble Bush: G. P. Putnam, New York, 1958; pp. 382; $3.95.

Charlie Mergendahl's tenth novel is candidly, and therefore honorably, commercial in its intention. Since it is the work of a seasoned and skillful professional, the book has merited, and has won, a measure of the kind of success for which it was designed: a time on the best-seller list, impressive secondary rights sales, and creation of an opportunity for its author to make, for a time, a career out of developing its potential and his own in another field, in this case as screenwriter. The book has in it, inevitably, those elements of contrivance, one-dimensional character, and sentimentalization of setting which are the immemorial components of popular storytelling, but they are resourcefully exploited in clean prose and with generally successful effect, so that whatever one's feeling about books of its kind in general, one acknowledges with pleasure that The Bramble Bush is an eminent particular example.

To deal first with the general kind of book, and with my individual feeling about it, it has never seemed to me that the house of fiction must be composed entirely of galleries; there are and should be counting rooms as well. Those of us who aspire to occupy the former owe a good deal to those who locate their talents where more money is. For without commercial novels, fiction would be a far smaller house, a cottage perhaps like poetry, and the grandeur, financial as well as artistic, which a talent as large as Hemingway's or Faulkner's may attain in these days of our culture would be quite impossible.

This is not to say that I urge those who follow serious fiction seriously to read The Bramble Bush; it is not a serious work nor is it meant to be. It is, on the other hand, and we come now to its eminence as particular example, considerably better written and more smoothly plotted than such other novels of its kind as I have read recently.

The publishers of The Bramble Bush, for example, invite a comparison with Peyton Place; they are wise to do so. Peyton Place is a far inferior commodity. It is sloppily written, unevenly plotted, and not very intelligent, relying on a kind of catalogue of perversions and a trite literary rebelliousness, rather than on dramatization of its material, to interest its readers. The attitudes of The Bramble Bush are trite, perhaps — such triteness is one of the necessary limits of its kind of book — but it is no catalogue; when it deals, as it frequently does, with small town sexuality, the episodes succeed as narrative and their nature is, moreover, understood by the author. They, and the non-sexual episodes as well — which are concerned with the life and problems of a Cape Cod physician impelled towards an act of euthanasia — are subordinated to plot by a disciplined man who is in full control of both his material and his prose.

Mergendahl '41

If one is to write popular fiction, it is surely better to do it well than badly. With The Bramble Bush, Charlie Mergendahl demonstrates that he knows his craft, and this, from one writer of another, is not small praise.

Necrology

1890 OLIVER WILLIAM TURNER, M.D., for more than fifty years a physician and surgeon in Augusta, died on November 24, 1958, at the home of his daughter in Jackson Heights, Long Island, N. Y. Born on December 10, 1867, in Augusta, he prepared at Cony High School and following his graduation in 1890 studied for a year at the Maine Medical School. He was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia in 1893 and did post-graduate study in London, Vienna, Budapest, and Prague. He set up practice in Augusta in 1893 and specialized in eye, ear, nose, and throat, serving as a consulting ophthalmologist at Gardiner General Hospital, Sisters Hospital in Waterville, Augusta State Hospital, Augusta General Hospital, and the Togus Veterans' Hospital. He performed the first bronchoscopy ever done in Maine, removing an open safety pin from the lung of a young girl without scarring the lung tissue. For 25 years he was the only doctor in Maine equipped for specializing in endoscopic work.

A Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, Dr. Turner retired to Boothbay Harbor in 1947. He is survived by a son, Dr. Rodney D. Turner '20, and a daughter, Miss Madeleine Turner. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1892 THOMAS FLINT NICHOLS, a retired mining and bridge engineer, died on December 12, 1958, in Utica, N. Y., at the age of 88. Born on November 10, 1870, in Pownal, he was the son of Charles L. Nichols of the Class of 1857 and prepared at Freeport High School. Following his graduation in 1892 he studied at Clark University and received a doctor of philosophy degree three years later. After teaching mathematics for a year at the University of Wisconsin, he became assistant professor of mathematics at Hamilton College. In 1906 he was named an assistant engineer for the state of New York. Two years later he went to Arizona as a mining engineer, worked for the state of Arizona from 1912 until 1920, and then returned to New York as a bridge engineer, again with the state. He retired in 1939. A member of the American Concrete Institute and the Society of Professional Engineers, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Alice Root Nichols, whom he married in Clinton, N. Y., on December 20, 1900. He was a member of Theta Delta Chi and Phi Beta Kappa fraternities.

1894 ARTHUR CHAPMAN, retired justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, died in Portland on January 5, 1959, at the age of 85. Born in Deering on August 6, 1873, he prepared at Deering High School and following his graduation from Bowdoin taught school for a year in Detroit, Mich., and for two years in Stamford, Conn. He returned to Portland in 1898 to study law and was admitted to the bar in 1900. He was appointed to Maine's Superior Court in 1925 and seventeen years later was named to the Supreme Judicial Court. He retired in 1945 and withdrew entirely from the bench in 1952 after the maximum seven-year term as an active-retired justice.

Judge Chapman was elected to the Portland City Council in 1901 and served as its president. He was also an alderman in 1902-03. He served as assistant United States district attorney in Maine from 1904 to 1915, when he became United States Commissioner. For many years Alumni Fund agent for the Old Guard classes, he was a past president of the Portland Bowdoin Club. In 1944 Bowdoin conferred upon him an honorary doctor of laws degree, and eight years later, in 1952, he received the cherished Alumni Service Award at Commencement.

His judicial philosophy was embodied in a comment he once made about a judge who had been called "brave" for reaching a certain decision. "It isn't bravery," he said. "That is what a judge is there for. It's his job to understand the issues and the law and to rule according to the law."

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Agnes Fairbrother Chapman, whom he married in Portland on May 23, 1905; two sons, Richard S. '28 and Arthur jr. '39; and six grandchildren. His fraternity was Theta Delta Chi.

1894 FRANCIS WILLIAM DANA, retired trust officer of the First Portland National Bank, died on January 4, 1959, at his home in Portland. Born in that city on November 27, 1871, he prepared at Portland High School and following his graduation from Bowdoin was engaged in the publishing business in Boston until 1900, when he became an investment banker in Boston. In 1910 he entered the industrial management field. He returned to Portland in 1927 as trust officer of the Portland National Bank and retired in 1941. A member of the Portland Club and the Portland Country Club, he was a past president of the Maine Corporate Fiduciaries Association and also served on the board of the Portland Community Chest, the Maine Medical Center, the Portland YWCA, and the Maine Home for Boys. He was a past president of the Portland Bowdoin Club and the Family Welfare Society in Portland. Surviving are five nieces and a nephew, Lawrence Dana '35. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1897 FRED GUSTAVUS KNEELAND, for many years Judge of the Stutsman County Court in North Dakota, died on June 3, 1958, in Santa Ana, Calif. Born on June 5, 1874, in Sweden, he prepared at Bridgton Academy and following his graduation from Bowdoin in 1897 became principal of Denmark High School. He later studied law and set up practice in Bridgton in 1901. Two years later he moved to Jamestown, N. Dak., where he served as city attorney, as county attorney, and as a member of the North Dakota legislature before being elected Judge of the Stutsman County Court in 1936. A member of the Jamestown Park Board and a trustee of the Jamestown Public Library, he was also chairman of the board of trustees at Jamestown College for some time. Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Mary A. Lanier of Fargo, N. Dak.; two sons, William F. of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Robert P. of Santa Ana, Calif.; and eleven grandchildren. He was a member of Theta Delta Chi and Phi Beta Kappa fraternities.

1899 EDWARD RAWSON GODFREY, a Bangor lawyer for fifty years, 1899's Class Secretary, and owner of the Bangor airport from 1925 until 1940, died in that city on December 2, 1958. Born there on December 27, 1877, he prepared at the local high school and following his graduation from Bowdoin studied at both Harvard Law School and the University of Maine Law School. From 1902 until 1905 he operated a 1,000 acre rice farm in Lake Charles, La. As an undergraduate he was known as "the strongest amateur in America" and also held the Maine, Bowdoin, and New England shot put records. He was captain of the track team which won the New Englands in 1899.

Mr. Godfrey visualized Bangor as an aviation center and purchased gradually some 500 acres of land, which are now included in Dow Air Force Base. In 1940 the government took over Godfrey Field. Although he never piloted an aircraft himself, he owned planes which his sons flew and he was often a passenger with them.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Emma Eastman Godfrey, whom he married on February 22, 1905, in Lake Charles; two sons, Edward R. jr. of Lloyd Neck, L. I., N. Y., and Prentiss of Bangor; a daughter, Mrs. James B. P. Green of Rego Park, N. Y.; and eleven grandchildren. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1912 HAROLD AUGUSTUS ANDREWS, Associate Justice of the Rhode Island Supreme Court, died on December 8, 1958, in Providence, R. I. Born on August 26, 1889, in East Conway, N. H., he prepared at Fryeburg Academy and following his graduation from Bowdoin cum laude entered Harvard Law School. He received his bachelor of laws degree in 1915 and set up practice in Providence. In 1916 he went to the Mexican border with the Rhode Island National Guard and during World War I served in France as a sergeant in the 26th (Yankee) Division. Upon his discharge he resumed the practice of law in Providence. From 1921 until 1926 he was First Assistant United States District Attorney in that district. Upon leaving that office he became associated with the firm of Hinckley, Allen, Tillinghast & Wheeler and became a partner in 1930.

From 1928 until 1933 Justice Andrews was State Law Revision Commissioner. In 1948 he was appointed an Associate Justice of the Rhode Island Superior Court and was elevated to the Supreme Court in January of 1956. Bowdoin conferred upon him an honorary doctor of laws degree last June, at which time the citation read by President Coles said, in part, "... demonstrating not only the knowledge, skill, and integrity necessary for a great judge, but also the courage of conscience vigorously to dissent. His fearlessness has proved his mettle to the people of Rhode Island, who, as we, hold him in high regard. Proudly we hail him, a son of Bowdoin who has more than fulfilled his 'peculiar obligations to exert his talents for the public good.'"

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Helen Daniels Andrews, whom he married in Providence on June 21, 1922; two daughters, Mrs. Theodore F. Marble of Schenectady, N. Y., and Mrs. John R. Nilsson of San Diego, Calif.; and five grandchildren.

1913 FRED DIXON WISH, JR., for 28 years superintendent of schools in Hartford, Conn., died in Lakeland, Fla., on December 28, 1958. The Class Secretary sends his kindest regards to all classmates and thanks them for their Christmas greetings. He is looking forward to seeing many members of 1909 in June.

Cub Simmons reports a recent visit by Shirt and Mrs. Hathaway '12.

Carl Stone passes along word that Wallie Hayden is located in Washburn, Wis., and that he has retired from business. Wallie sends best regards to the Class, but he is doubtful that he will be able to join us in June for our Fiftieth.

Jim Sturtevant writes that he has again been appointed Chief of the Pediatric Department of the Lawrence Memorial Associated Hospital at New London, Conn.

With deep regret we record the death of Leonard Timberlake at his daughter's home in Glendale, Calif., on February 11. Memorial services were held both here and in Portland.

1910 Secretary, E. Curtis Matthews
Piscataqua Savings Bank
Portsmouth, N. H.

Bob Hale was the subject of editorial tribute in the Portland Press Herald on New Year's Day. Entitled "A Salute to Robert Hale for Long and Faithful Service," the editorial said, in part, "It was because of his fine character and insistence on being himself that he never became known as a glad-hander or a spell-binding tub-thumper during an election campaign. Although he lost the election, Maine people who respect integrity and rugged individualism, and despise sham, will always think of Robert Hale as a winner."

Minds, too, need cultivating

Good crops spring from fertilized and tended land—great thoughts from enriched and disciplined minds. Nourish the mind, and the harvest can be bountiful beyond all measure, for the mind contains the most precious of all seeds—the ideas that shape our world.

Our nation, up to now, has been richly rewarded by the quality of thought nourished in our colleges and universities. The kind of learning developed there has been responsible in no small part for our American way of life, with all its freedom, all its idealism, all its promise.

That is why the following facts should be of deep concern to every American:

1. Low salaries are not only driving gifted college teachers into other fields, but are steadily reducing the number of qualified people who choose college teaching as a career.

2. Many classrooms are already overcrowded, yet in the next decade applications for college enrollment will DOUBLE in number.

Our institutions of higher learning are doing their utmost to meet these challenges, and to overcome them. But they need the help of all who hope for continued progress in science, in statesmanship, in the strengthening of our democratic ideals. And they need it now!

If you want to know more about what the college crisis means to you, and what you can do to help, write for a free booklet to:

BOWDOIN COLLEGE IN 1860

(12 $\frac{3}{4}$ " by 25")

is an authentic reproduction of the colonial spindle mirror. It is made of hard wood and fitted with plate glass. The picture is a colored print of the Bowdoin campus of 1860. The mirror is finished in black and gold.

Priced at $15.75

THE BOWDOIN CHAIR

is a splendid reproduction of the straight arm chair of early New England. Sturdily constructed of selected hardwood, it is finished in satin black with natural wood arms. The Bowdoin Seal and the stripings are in white. Attractive and comfortable, the Bowdoin Chair merits a place in living room, study, and office.

Each chair packed in heavy carton — shipping weight 30 pounds. Shipment by Railway Express, charges collect.

TO ALUMNI—from The Society of Bowdoin Women

It is our pleasure to extend through you to each and every lady in your family a cordial invitation to join in the activities of our Society during Commencement this year. Since 1922, when the Society of Bowdoin Women was founded, one of the important functions of the organization has been to provide hospitality for all women visiting the campus at Commencement and on other special occasions. At our headquarters in Gibson Hall of Music a feeling of friendliness prevails and a warm welcome is extended. Members of our Society will serve as hostesses there all day Friday and on Saturday morning to greet the guests and give information.

Luncheons for all women attending Commencement are sponsored by the Society on Friday and Saturday and take place while the alumni are having their own special meetings. Our guests of honor at the Commencement luncheon on Saturday are the mothers and wives of the graduating class. The annual meeting of the Society is held on Friday.

The aim of the Society of Bowdoin Women is "to provide an organization in which women with a common bond of Bowdoin loyalty may, by becoming better acquainted with the College and with each other, work together to serve the College in every possible way."

While hospitality to all women visiting the campus during Commencement is of greatest importance, we also provide funds biennially for lectures at the College by outstanding women, add to the "Society of Bowdoin Women Foundation" created by us in 1924 (the income of which is administered by the College and used for general college purposes), and make other gifts of varied nature.

There are only two qualifications for membership in our Society — first, an interest in Bowdoin, and second, the payment of $1.00 annual dues. We think it is a fine way to show one's love for the College and hope that we may have one or more members from the family of every Bowdoin alumnus. Our treasurer is Mrs. Gilbert M. Elliott jr., 15 Vaughan Street, Portland 4.

We have a good time together and we think our organization is a benefit to the College. We hope you will let us know if the ladies in your family are planning to attend Commencement this June and would like to share in our activities. A warm welcome will await them.

Cordially yours,

ELIZABETH N. COUSINS, President
Society of Bowdoin Women

Commencement Preview

For the third consecutive year the Alumni Institute will constitute a part of the Commencement Weekend. At this writing the final details are yet to be completed, but two faculty members will deliver lectures on Friday, June 12 — one in the morning and one in the afternoon.

As usual, many alumni are planning to return for class reunions. Several classes will hold family gatherings and informal off-year reunions, which are growing in popularity each year.

Owen Brewster, assisted by Class Secretary Irving Rich, is serving as Chairman for 1909's Fiftieth Reunion. Conference Room B of the Moulton Union and Coleman Hall will be reunion headquarters. The Friday dinner will be at the Stowe House.

Conference Room A and 19 Hyde Hall are campus headquarters for 1914's Forty-fifth. Chairman Warren Eddy is being assisted by Bill Farrar and Arthur Merrill. Earle Thompson will entertain the class at his summer home in West Boothbay for the Friday dinner and outing.

Don Higgins, Roy Foulke, Lou McCarthy, and Don McDonald are 1919's Reunion committee. They have arranged a Friday dinner at the Eagle Hotel. Campus headquarters for the Fortieth will be 3 South Appleton Hall.

Lookout Point House is the site for 1924's Friday dinner and outing, and 17 and 19 North Moore Hall are campus headquarters. Jake Aldred is chairman for the Thirty-fifth.

Sam Ladd is once again Reunion Chairman for 1929 as it prepares to celebrate its Thirtieth. Campus headquarters will be 3 South Moore Hall, and the Friday dinner will be at the Westcustago Inn in Yarmouth.

The Class of 1934 is planning a big Twenty-fifth Reunion. Dick Davis is Chairman. Unaccompanied class members will be housed in North Appleton Hall, and families will be accommodated off campus. The Pickard Field House will be campus headquarters, beginning with the Thursday afternoon reception for faculty and friends. Thursday night the class will hold a stag dinner at the Poland Spring House. The family outing on Friday will be at Hermit Island, Small Point.

Joe Pierce, assisted by Dan Hanley, is plotting 1939's Twentieth. Headquarters will be at South Maine Hall. Plans for the Friday outing and dinner call for a boat trip from South Freeport via the islands to the New Meadows Yacht Club.

For its Fifteenth 1944 will gather at 17 North Maine Hall. The Orr's Island Yacht Club is the location of the Friday outing and dinner. Roy LaCasce is in charge of arrangements.

Class Secretary Ira Pitcher heads 1949's Tenth Reunion committee, with headquarters at 3 South Winthrop Hall and a Friday outing at the home of Matthew Frangedakis in North Harpswell.

Co-Chairmen Al Hetherington and Horace Hildreth report 1954's plans for a Friday dinner at the Simon Gurnet Restaurant on Great Island. Fifth Reunion campus headquarters will be 19 North Winthrop Hall.

The Wiscasset Inn will be 1910's off-campus reunion center this June. Sewall Webster is in charge of arrangements and reservations. As is their custom, 1928 and 1929 will celebrate jointly. Members of 1950, Bowdoin's largest class, will gather again at 17 South Appleton for an off-year reunion. Plans are in the offing for a possible 1950 Friday outing.

The Society of Bowdoin Women will adhere to the pattern of previous years by having open house and headquarters at Gibson Hall. All Bowdoin ladies and their friends are welcome. The Society will again sponsor luncheons on Friday and Saturday.

From all indications, this will be one of the largest and finest Commencement Weekends in Bowdoin history. Early forecasts promise a large turnout.

April 6 — 1909 and 1959

On April 6, 1909, a white man, a Negro, and four Eskimos arrived at the top of the world. They had reached the North Pole by dog sled and on foot. Without the aid of airplanes, snow-cats, and all of the other paraphernalia of modern explorers and their expeditions, they had conquered the frozen North. And most interesting of all was the reason: one man's desire to discover the North Pole — to go there, to experience it, and to be first. He was not impelled by notions of money, power, ownership, or exploitation. If he was attracted by the idea of fame, it was the fame of accomplishment, not that of possession.

Robert Edwin Peary '77 was the man whose dreams and repeated efforts found fruition on that spring day fifty years ago. He was certainly not a young man (fifty-two), and he had been through many grueling experiences before he finally achieved his goal. It was spring in the United States, in Maine, in Brunswick — where the Class of 1909, now about to observe its Fiftieth Reunion, was preparing to graduate. But the Arctic spring was far different — cold, windy, and treacherous. The vast ice fields over which Peary and his comrades raced to and from the Pole were soon to break up during the spring thaw. Yet this man, directing and urging his small party of five, pressed on and conquered one of the last geographic frontiers.

Bowdoin has bred many pioneers, and it is proud of each of them. Nathaniel Hawthorne of the Class of 1825 pioneered in the "modern psychological novel." Dudley Sargent '75 pioneered in the field of physical education. Alfred Kinsey '16 pioneered in frank, outspoken studies of human sexual habits. And Robert Peary, civil engineer, naval officer, explorer, author, and lecturer, pioneered in geographic discovery. By discovering, actually reaching, the North Pole, the culmination of a quarter-century of arctic exploration, he opened the way for further efforts in the Arctic and the Antarctic. He did a great deal to make Americans conscious of the importance of the Polar regions. Today, when we have geophysical bases and advanced military listening posts in these areas, we are particularly aware of our debt to him. On April 6, 1959, Bowdoin is particularly proud of Robert Edwin Peary of the Class of 1877.

P. C. B.

In honor of Admiral Peary and his discovery of the Pole, Bowdoin is sponsoring this spring a special series of three Arctic lectures. On April 17 Commander Edward Peary Stafford, USN, grandson of the explorer, spoke on aviation in the Arctic. On May 6, Peary's birthday, his daughter, Mrs. Edward (Marie Peary) Stafford H'49, speaks on her father and his conquest of the Pole. Commander William R. Anderson, USN, Commanding Officer of the U.S.S. Nautilus, talks about polar exploration under the ice on May 7.

In addition to this, the Library has featured a special Peary exhibit for more than a month, many of the items having been lent by Mrs. Stafford. And the College has been making extensive use, in recent mailings, of the four-cent blue postage stamp, commemorating Arctic exploration, dated 1909 and 1959, and first issued from Peary's birthplace, Cresson, Pa., on April 6, 1959.

THE COVER

This photograph of Robert Edwin Peary of the Class of 1877 shows him in the dress uniform of a commander in the United States Navy, which rank he held at the time he discovered the North Pole on April 6, 1909. Shortly after his return from that final Arctic trip, he was made a rear admiral in the Navy. The original photograph from which the engraving was made belongs to his daughter, Mrs. Edward (Marie Peary) Stafford H'49.

The Realization Of A Dream

BY MARIE PEARY STAFFORD H'49

ROBERT EDWIN PEARY was one of the rare people who are privileged to achieve their life's ambition. Perhaps "privileged" is the wrong word to use. Practically everyone has a cherished dream or ambition, but only a small percentage have the courage, the will power, and the willingness to sacrifice in order to realize it. From the first moment, in 1886, when Arctic exploration first fired his imagination, Peary sacrificed everything to accomplish the task he had set himself. All other interests — and there were many — were pushed aside; family life, in which he delighted, was reduced to a minimum; and his finances, as well as those of his mother and his wife, were strained to the utmost. And for what?

Why should anyone deliberately give up all the things which make life pleasant, endure terrific physical hardships, face defeat and frustration time and time again, just for an empty dream, a goal which, even if reached, would be no different from the miles upon weary miles which he had already crossed? Was there money in it? This was the question which he was frequently asked. Even his small daughter was crushed to learn that if her father was successful the family would not be wealthy. Certainly exploration is the least lucrative occupation which one could choose.

Only those who knew Peary well had the answer. He was always ambitious. In the very beginning it was a personal ambition, common to many a boy who has grown up without a father and as a poor relation in a large and prosperous family. Doctor Gilbert Grosvenor, in his foreword to Peary's book The North Pole, says of him, "He graduated from Bowdoin College second in his class, a position which means unusual mental vigor in an institution which is noted for the fine scholarship and intellect of its alumni." This was personal. But as soon as he was out in the world, his horizon widened and he became eager and anxious to achieve something really important, something that would be worthwhile, not just for himself but for the progress and knowledge of the world and, most particularly, for the prestige of his own country. As a young naval officer, which he became shortly after graduation from Bowdoin, his latent patriotism was aroused to the point of fervor.

One other feeling influenced his choice of a life work. Always he had gloried in feats of physical strength and activity. In boyhood his greatest joys were swimming, boating, mountain climbing, horseback riding, anything which took him out of doors and which required skill and strength. In college he took part in all possible athletics and sports. He prided himself on his physical fitness. What could be more exhilarating to a man of that kind than the thought of pitting that fitness against the forces of nature, what he later called "A struggle of human brains and persistence against the blind, brute forces of the elements of primeval matter."?

For nearly four hundred years the Arctic had been the least known region in the world, in spite of its proximity to Europe and North America. Its history was one of almost unmitigated tragedy. Expedition after expedition, well equipped and hopeful, composed of some of the bravest and best men of various countries, went forth into this mysterious region. Some of them, such as the members of the ill-fated Sir John Franklin expedition, never returned. Others came back eventually, their numbers pitifully reduced and their stories an unbroken saga of hardship, suffering, death, and defeat. Here was surely a challenge for a red-blooded young man.

And so it began, very modestly at first, with a short summer reconnaissance of the Greenland Inland Ice in 1886. However, it was not until 1891 that his serious work of exploration began. In 1888 Peary married Josephine Diebitsch of Washington, D. C., one of the smartest things he ever did, for she proved to be not only an inspiration, and a comrade and helpmeet, but, to use his own words, "with her nimble fingers and ready woman's insight, was of inestimable assistance." She accompanied him on his first two expeditions, that of 1891 and of 1893, wintering both times in the far north of Greenland; in 1893, having left this country in June, she bore her first child in September. She was a very gallant person.

Until 1898 Peary's exploration work was in no way concerned with the discovery of the North Pole. He had another mystery which he felt it was important to solve, the exact status of the great land mass known as Greenland. One theory was that Greenland was an island. Another school of thought believed it to be a huge peninsula depending from land which probably extended over the Pole itself. But no one knew the truth of the matter, and Peary set himself the task of finding out.

In this he was successful, proving the insularity of Greenland by rounding the northern end, the broadest part of the island, in one of the most gruelling of all the sledge journeys which he was destined to make in his life. Then, and only then, did his thoughts turn to the discovery of the North Pole.

As long as Greenland was considered a peninsula of larger land to the north, it was thought that the inland ice might prove a highway to the Pole. Now that theory was proven false. It now remained to tackle the moving, shifting ice of the Polar Sea, which had already defeated so many sturdy adventurers. Obviously, the old methods would not serve. It would be necessary to attack the problem in some new way.

Peary had already made some radical changes in the accepted ways of polar exploration. First of all, he had conquered scurvy, the curse of nearly all previous expeditions. It had been the custom, all through the darkness of the Arctic winter night, for members of exploring parties to remain closely at headquarters, their only food the provisions which they had brought from home. Peary inaugurated monthly hunting parties, at the time of the full moon, when the snow reflected the white moonlight and doubled visibility. The country abounded with game, and fresh meat, the best anti-scorbutic known, was in plentiful supply on all his expeditions.

Then, too, Peary was the first to make full use of the Eskimos and their dogs. The majority of former explorers had ignored the Eskimos entirely, as savages who could be of no help in the work at hand. Kane's party had tried to make friends with them but, through mutual misunderstandings, the attempt failed. Peary, during his work in Greenland and particularly during the winter of 1894-95, which he and two companions spent with the Eskimos, had won their friendship and loyalty, and they became one of the most important factors in his ultimate success. He argued, very logically, that human beings who had spent their lives for generations in such inclement surroundings must have evolved the best methods of comfort and survival, and he quickly adopted their dress, their ways of travelling and hunting, and their forms of dwellings. He found the Eskimo dogs a far more satisfactory source of power as far as sledge travel was concerned than the time-honored method of man hauling used consistently by former explorers.

Both of these changes were important and essential innovations, but they still were not enough. During four years, from 1898 to 1902, years which Peary at the time considered completely wasted and during which he froze his toes and had to have them amputated, he tried and tried to get started towards his goal with no success whatever. Everything seemed to have conspired against him during those bitter four years. The worst storms he had ever experienced ravaged the country. A mysterious and highly contagious disease broke out among his dogs, reducing his splendid teams to a mere handful. And the humiliation of his crippled condition was not the least part of the mental anguish which he endured.

However, in spite of everything, the time was not wasted, for he learned a great deal. First and foremost was the unshakeable conviction that headquarters so far to the south were impractical. In the short time available for travelling, between the cessation of the winter blizzards and the breaking up of the ice of the Arctic Ocean, it took too long in days and too great a toll of energy for dogs and men to get his party to the edge of the polar pack ready to begin their journey to the Pole. The men were exhausted and the dogs depleted before the actual trip began.

The location of his headquarters was dependent each year on ice conditions. When the expedition ship had forged its way north through the ice as far as it was possible for it to get and still be able to make the journey home that same year, all provisions and equipment were unloaded and headquarters set up. The slender means so far available to Peary for the outfitting of his expeditions were not sufficient to charter a powerfully engined ship.

So the first requisite was a ship, strongly built to resist ice pressure, with driving engine force to get her to the most northern shores of the Canadian Arctic archipelago, on the very edge of the Polar Sea, there to serve as an immediate jumping off place for the Pole. This ship, the Roosevelt, named for Peary's great friend and supporter, Theodore Roosevelt, was obtained through the generosity of the Peary Arctic Club. Specially designed by Peary for her particular job, built in Maine of stout Maine timber, she was the realization of a dream.

When he sailed north in her in 1905, he felt that success was at last within his grasp. But he still had several bitter lessons to learn. One of the greatest difficulties of travel across the ice of the Polar sea is the constant shifting and moving of the great floes underfoot. Wind and tide are partially responsible and also the variable currents of the sea itself, currents which even as late as 1905 were far from completely charted or even known.

The South Pole is located on the high Antarctic continent with stable, dependable, immovable surface. While this does not make the climate any less severe or the hardships of travel and exploration more bearable, it does offer one boon. Caches of reserve food may be made in advance with the certainty that they will still be in the exact same location, ready to be picked up by an expedition party on its return journey, thus lightening their sledge loads and assuring them of sufficient food on their way back to headquarters. This is not possible in the Arctic, the Pole being situated in a sea of open water and floating, ever-changing ice.

Until Peary's time no one had reached a satisfactory solution of the problem of how to carry sufficient food for a party of men and dogs on a journey of hundreds of miles and return. By increasing the number of sledges so as to carry additional supplies, one also increased the number of mouths to be fed, because of the driver of the sledge and the dogs to haul it, so the result was the same. Peary believed that he had found the answer.

With his ship safely berthed for the winter on the northern shores of Grant Land, he had already gained an advantage because he could start his trip to the Pole, on the sea ice, directly from the ship itself. He was that much to the good over his previous attempts. Now for the actual sledge journey itself. All winter, between hunting parties, all of the ship's personnel were occupied with preparations for the coming trip. Sledges were built following the pattern of the standard Eskimo sledge but with modifications suggested by experience with sea ice. Clothing of selected furs was made by the Eskimo women, among the most skillful seamstresses in the world. Most vital of all, however, was the food — concentrated pemmican, concentrated tea — all packaged with two things in mind, the sturdiness of the container but also the maximum of lightness in weight. Each sledge load was scientifically planned for the exact requirements — so much food per man and dog per day — still allowing space and weight for the valuable instruments which were essential to the scientific program of the expedition. Everything was weighed and re-weighed, calculated to the last fraction of an ounce.

So necessarily stringent were the weight limits that Peary never took a man on his expeditions who smoked, that is, not a man who would be going out upon the polar sea. Peary felt that a smoker without his tobacco was moody and below par, and since every ounce of weight on the sledges was allocated to vital equipment, there could be no allowance made for the weight of tobacco.

These were the intensive preparations which it was hoped would at last, at last, be rewarded by success. Before he left home, Peary's toe-less feet had been repaired by a skilled surgeon and Peary's iron will and constant practice had made it possible for him to walk on snow shoes almost as easily as he had done before the amputation. Everything seemed to point to an easy victory.

But — let him tell it in his own words — "Complete success was frustrated by one of those unforeseen moves of our great adversary, in that a season of unusually violent and continued winds disrupted the polar pack, separating me from my supporting parties, with insufficient supplies, so that, when almost within striking distance of the goal, it was necessary to turn back because of the imminent danger of starvation. When victory seemed at last almost within reach, I was blocked by a move which could not possibly have been foreseen, and which, when I encountered it, I was helpless to meet. And I and those with me were not only checkmated but very nearly lost our lives as well."

These restrained statements are in the first chapter of his book The North Pole. He could write them after he had finally been successful. He could not have written them on his return from that painful expedition, so bitter was his disappointment, so deep the scar left on his memory by the near tragedy to his companions and, in a lesser degree, to himself. In his despair, at that particular time, death to him would not have been a tragedy.

One thing and one thing only he was spared. Because of his loyal friends who had formed the Peary Arctic Club, he would not be forced again to spend time and energy in trying to raise funds for another expedition, or to undertake long lecture trips in an effort to increase the amount of money which he himself could contribute personally. The men of the Peary Arctic Club had voluntarily pledged themselves to give his expeditions the necessary financial backing, for as long a time as he thought there was a chance of success.

In those days there was no expensive modern equipment to help an explorer — no radio, no caterpillar tractors, no ice breakers, no convoys of supply ships, and, most vital of all, no planes and, therefore, no possibility of air rescue. Compared with the expense of present-day expeditions, the amount needed by those of Peary is pitifully small, and yet it was difficult to obtain, there being no general interest in the Arctic and no awareness of its importance. The Peary Arctic Club relieved one of the greatest burdens which an explorer is forced to bear.

So, in July of 1908, the gallant little Roosevelt set sail for the north once more, carrying Peary on his last attempt to wrest success from his previous failures. Everything had been planned to the last careful detail. But it had been before. Everything seemed propitious. But it had seemed that way before. The only advantage this time was the increased knowledge and experience derived from the years of disappointment and frustration. But if Peary had been a defeatist, he would have given up long before. And so he was off again.

This time he had evolved a plan of attack on the Pole and the elements of nature which was like a war-time campaign. With his ship once more in her old winter harbor at Cape Sheridan in Grant Land, on the very edge of the polar sea, he divided the members of his party into groups, six in all, with Eskimo assistants and their own dogs and sledges. During the winter, each month these men went out on hunting parties, always the same members in each group, so that they became accustomed to one another and operated like well trained teams.

When the time came (February 22nd, to be exact) for the actual journey to the Pole to start, there were in the field seven members of the expedition, including Peary; nineteen Eskimos, one hundred and forty dogs, and twenty-eight sledges. They left the ship at different times, Peary, supervising last minute details, being the last to leave, and rendezvoused at Cape Columbia, about ninety miles away. This trip was in the nature of a maiden voyage, a test trip on which to discover anything which might go wrong, anything which had been forgotten, anything which could be remedied before it was too late.

At Cape Columbia the plan of campaign was put into action. Briefly, it was this. There were to be five supporting parties whose primary object was to place Peary at an ultimate advanced base on the sea ice less than one hundred and fifty miles from the Pole, supplied with the pick of sleds, dogs, and drivers, and with ample supplies to get him to the Pole and back to the land over a well marked trail.

To accomplish this, at each five-day interval, one supporting party turned back, leaving the greater part of its provisions with the main party and taking with it the weakest sledges and the poorest dogs. In addition, each returning party would keep the trail open and reknit it wherever leads of open water or the drift of the sea ice had broken it. Each returning party made the trail more plain and in that way the Polar party, on its return journey to land, could travel fast and light, never held up by the necessity of scouting or pioneering for a new trail.

Peary at Cape Thomas Hubbard, his most westerly point of exploration, reached on June 28, 1906. The flag, which has been given to the National Geographic Society by Mrs. Stafford, shows the gaps for four of the six pieces which Peary eventually cut from it and left at various places in his Arctic explorations. Two of the six pieces have been recovered, including the fifth fragment, which was left at Cape Thomas Hubbard in June, 1906, and recovered by Donald B. MacMillan '98 in 1914.

One of the most popular photographs of Peary, this shows him in his Arctic garb.

This is the plaque which was erected in 1932 at Cape York, Greenland, in recognition of the "devoted services of the Eskimo people" to Admiral Peary. The Latin motto at the top of the plaque is Peary's own — "I shall find a way or make one."

This photograph shows the very uneven surface and the difficulties of travel in the Arctic ice fields. Here four sleds are pulled by dogs and pushed by men across vast expanses of rough ice and snow.

This clever plan, so carefully thought out in every detail and yet so dependent on the entire co-operation of the men involved, worked to perfection. Peary was left at the advance base at 87° 47' on April 1st, with six men, five sledges, and forty dogs. On the morning of April 2nd he started off in a temperature of 25° below zero and over the best ice surface he had ever encountered. In fact, this fabulously smooth, firm ice has since been found to have been the famous ice island T3, only recently discovered, but Peary was too intent on his objective, so tantalizingly near now, to stop to find out if the ice were fresh or salt, even if the possibility had occurred to him.

After ten hours of marching, resulting in thirty miles of distance, they camped but slept only a few hours before they pushed on for another twenty miles. A few more snatched hours of sleep and once more they were off. Peary's deep emotion and increasing excitement were very evidently communicated to his companions because they were almost as eager as he to go on. After a short sleep at the camp near the 89th parallel the party, though tired, set out again in the evening in a temperature of 35° below zero, but while they continued to make good time they found themselves pretty well tired out on the night of April 5th and more sleep was taken. Camp was made at 10 o'clock the morning of April 6th, at latitude 89° 57', only three miles from the Pole itself.

After taking the necessary observations and checking and rechecking them, Peary, wearied by the long marches and the mental strain and excitement, was forced to take time out for sleep, but at six in the evening he was up again to take another observation, and then, with an unloaded sledge and the freshest dogs and the Eskimo Ootah as his driver, he quartered the ice for an estimated eight miles in each direction, taking observations at the end of each run. At some time he must have passed directly over the mathematical point which is the Pole itself. His dream of twenty years was realized; his goal had finally been reached.

To those of us who are so accustomed to the rapid transportation of our day, the number of miles which Peary covered on foot in the course of his explorations seems incredible, as well as the time consumed. A striking example of this, showing also the almost unbelievable contrast, is the fact that planes can now fly from Cape Columbia to the Pole in one hour whereas the same distance took Peary thirty-seven days to cover, in discomfort and fatigue.

The most fitting conclusion to this story of a man's perseverance and courage and sheer grit in the face of hardships which would most certainly have daunted a weaker or less dedicated soul is a quotation, again from Theodore Roosevelt: "A 'dash for the Pole' can be successful only if there have been many preliminary years of painstaking, patient toil. Great physical hardihood and endurance, an iron will and unflinching courage, the power of command, the thirst for adventure, and a keen and far-sighted intelligence — all these must go to the make-up of the successful Arctic explorer; and these, and more than these, have gone to the make-up of the chief of successful Arctic explorers, of the man who succeeded where hitherto even the best and the bravest had failed — Commander Peary."

This article was written for the Alumnus at the invitation of the editors by Mrs. Edward (Marie Peary) Stafford H'49 in observance of the fiftieth anniversary of her father's discovery of the North Pole.

Academic Life At Oxford

By Roger Howell, Jr. '58

IT IS PERHAPS A BIT presumptuous to pontificate on the intellectual standards of Oxford after only two terms of residence, but the position of being an American in the British educational system naturally tends to draw one to make comparisons. As a general thesis I would suggest that the British educational system, especially at the university level, demands more from its students and as a result creates an intellectual atmosphere which is only poorly rivalled by its American counterpart. It would seem to me that the American schools and universities have much to learn from a system which has existed for their comparison for a long time. In the actual discussion of work at Oxford, I will confine myself largely to work within the undergraduate Honour School of Modern History, for, since I am reading in this school, it is the one whose techniques I know best, but lest it be suggested that I am creating a false picture by this, I would add that the opinions of other Rhodes Scholars who have come up in recent years and read in other schools seem to coincide very closely with what I take to be the nature of the educational system here.

The secret of the high standards at Oxford is not to be found solely in the practices and demands that the student meets at the university; the British have consistently demanded a more rigorous program at the secondary level than we have in the United States. In the course of my visit in this country, I have had the opportunity to visit a number of schools, ranging from the secondary modern (state) school to one of the public (private boarding) schools. The level is admittedly not uniform, and there is a dangerously growing desire to institute a type of comprehensive school at the expense of other sorts and in imitation of what would seem to be the poorest qualities of the American school system. But this is a demand which seldom is heard from careful, reflective people. It is heard particularly from the left wing of the Labour Party, but it is thankfully repudiated by the bulk of their leaders. It is gratifying, in any case, to find political leaders who can discuss educational problems in an intelligent manner. A debate in parliament recently on the subject of education managed to avoid the red herring of sputniks and dealt with the purposes and techniques of education instead.

If the secondary modern schools leave something to be desired, it should be remembered that they are not designed primarily as intellectual training grounds, but this role is performed by other schools, the grammar schools (which occupy a strange position partially in and partially out of the state system) and the independent schools. The level of work pursued at one grammar school I visited, the Crypt School in Gloucester, was astounding to an American who has viewed with alarm the frustrations of receiving adequate intellectual training in our own school system. Perhaps the most striking quality is the extent of specialization allowed students. They come to the universities with a more than elementary knowledge of their subjects. They may know nothing about Basic Communications 1-2, but they know more history both in theory and in factual detail than many juniors and seniors on American campuses, and the same, as far as I can gather, can be quite legitimately said about students of other subjects. The British system seems to be designed to encourage its students to use their brains, not to adjust them happily to a life where they can get along without them.

The degree of difference can be measured even more clearly at the university level. There are, of course, objections to the Honour School of Modern History, and those who are most intimately concerned with it will not deny them. It is, to a great extent, parochial in that it lays far more stress on British history than it does on any other single subject. It can, at its worst, become overly concerned with cleverness, but the generalization, so often heard among American critics of the Oxford system, that Oxford produces historians who write more brilliantly than most of their compatriots but whose research is often shoddy by American standards which demand a greater grasp of factual material, is really true only to the extent that English historians do tend to write better than most of their colleagues. Obviously, not all English historians are good, but any aspersions on their ability as a group to handle factual material and research are patently silly. In the teaching of history, Oxford benefits from an outstanding collection of historians on the university staff, men ranging in quality and reputation from controversialists whose ability is a matter of debate, such as Trevor-Roper, to those whose reputation as masters in their discipline is universally recognized, such as Sir Maurice Powicke.

But the superiority of Oxford education cannot totally be explained by the men who teach here, for American universities and colleges also have capable men on their staffs. The explanation, it seems to me, is to be found in the outlook of these men, the methods they employ, and the outlook of the students as a whole. A comparison of each of these factors with American experience is a sobering and, I trust, an informative thing.

As far as outlook on the part of the dons, the difference can be summed up, I think, in the fact that they have achieved what seems to be a better balance among the somewhat diverse objectives of college teaching than has been achieved by many of their American colleagues. They have achieved a balance not only between teaching and research, but also between specialization and a broad grasp of their subject. Research is rapidly becoming the bane of the American college teachers, and the blame here can be laid largely, I think, on college administrations, which seem to have a strange preoccupation with research, which they tend to equate with prestige. Publish or perish is no longer an empty threat, and it is leading to the accumulation of the largest pile of intellectual rubbish in the history of mankind. Any disinterested perusal of the so-called scholarly publications merely confirms this view, and the most depressing thing is that professors are devoting more and more of their time to the production of this drivel.

Historians have to do research; if they are unwilling to pursue their subject at the research level or if they are incapable of doing so, there is little hope that they will be able to communicate it to their students even at the learning level, but historians must also remember that they hold their university positions because they are supposed to be teachers. This is something which Oxford historians seem to be able to do. In some ways, they are less successful in maintaining a balance between specialization and broadness, but the spectacle of the historical specialist entrenched in the particular corner of history he has made his fortress, waiting to shoot down any unwary individuals who trample on his preserve and cautious himself lest he wander out of it and be shot down, is fortunately less apparent here than it is on our own side of the Atlantic.

Of the methods employed for instruction at Oxford I have said something in my earlier article. I hold to my first impressions of the tutorial system. I find it exciting, demanding, productive, and I am as convinced of its merits as Robert Coffin '15 was. But what is perhaps the greatest difference in method is not the physical apparatus of the tutorial, for, after all, the skillful professor can surmount this difficulty through a judicious use of conferences and written work. The difference is perhaps best expressed in the attitude towards textbooks. A former Tallman professor remarked to me while he was at Bowdoin, "There is nothing so anti-intellectual as a textbook," and this statement seems to me to be perfectly valid.

In a sense, then, all our complaining about anti-intellectualism on the American college scene is self-defeating because of a professional and student preoccupation with the textbook. Actually, the textbook as a method of instruction here virtually disappears even at the school level. The student is led to reading of a more profitable nature and is introduced to the controversies of history through a study of important pieces of scholarly writing. There is a very dangerous tendency in American education to regard the textbook as the final word, and this is an attitude which is fostered unwittingly by the injudicious use of textbooks on the part of many professors. I cannot honestly say that I was weaned from the textbook before I came to Oxford, and if nothing else of benefit came from experiences here, I would be eternally grateful just for that weaning. Obviously, historical maturing would have come with graduate school, but it is rewarding to find that an extremely demanding approach to mature history can be undertaken at the undergraduate level. A good deal of the difference may stem from the fact that the undergraduate degree here is not considered to be the legitimate heritage of everyone as it is coming to be regarded in the United States. Its place is that which I presume our Ph.D. occupies (I might add that it is both disconcerting and enlightening to see the amused contempt of many English scholars for our "research" and Ph.D's). We might begin to take our collegiate work a bit more seriously, for the ease with which a B.A. can be gathered in at many institutions in the United States means simply that the scholar has to accumulate a vast collection of alphabetical trimmings for his name before he can legitimately claim he has reached the level which a simple B.A. Oxon with honours implies.

The final component of the academic scene is student attitude. I indicated in my earlier article that I find English students more seriously devoted to their work, more conscious of the fact that they are at a university, simply more aware that they are supposed to be students than their American counterparts. It is hard to say what the causes of this are. Certainly part of the explanation is to be found in superior preparation at a more advanced level in their secondary schools. Perhaps, too, the fact that they tend to be older than the American undergraduate is a vital influence. They certainly are pressed harder in all ways, and this must contribute to their more serious nature. It is infinitely harder to get into Oxford or Cambridge than it is to get into American colleges, and because of this selection, the standard of the student body is naturally high. And once in, it is no easy path to a good degree.

But all these factors, taken either singly or in combination, do not seem to me to explain satisfactorily the difference, and I must simply admit that I have, as yet, found no explanation that satisfies me. At every turn, I am presented with the evidences of a student body which is lively, aware, challenging, and this is a feeling which I never exactly had on any American campus I visited. One meets this attitude at every turn: in tutorials, in chance conversations, in the Bodleian. It is to be found every Thursday night in the Union, where debating is conducted with a skill and verve which might well give American debaters pause to consider what they are doing. One meets it in the extra-curricular organizations; students at lectures actually outnumber dons. I think back to the Institute Lectures at Bowdoin, and I recollect that this situation is not exactly typical in Brunswick. One finds it in active political groups within the university. I can remember student disinterest in the United States in the midst of the Suez crisis, the Hungarian rising, and an election campaign. It makes one wonder what Bowdoin, for example, would do with a Labour Club or a campaign for nuclear disarmament. I do not think much would be done, for it seems to be difficult to interest students even in Young Republicans or Young Democrats.

Perhaps in this article I have seemed unduly hard on American education, professors, and students. I have been hard deliberately, because I think this must be done, and Oxford has brought this home to me more than ever before. I do not intend to slander American education. I am grateful for what it has done for me, but I have been fortunate in being able to sample it at its best. I am now sampling British education at its best, and I find it more rewarding and productive than ours. There are lessons to be learned from this, and the Rhodes Scholar who does not try to explain what he finds satisfying here is not fulfilling a part of the trust that has been placed in him.

On the other hand, I do not mean to idealize Oxford. It has faults as every institution has. Its approach to anything is disconcertingly complex because Oxford is a world and an experience which has accumulated over many centuries. Besides offering the finest historical discipline in the world at the undergraduate level, it can be, I confess, one of the most annoying medieval unrealities to be encountered anywhere.

I suppose, all in all, one simply says Oxford is extraordinary in the fullest sense of the word, abandons attempts to define precisely what Oxford experience is, and turns again to learning.

Admissions Decisions

During early March the Admissions staff made its first complete run through nearly 1100 applications (as compared to the 950 it reviewed last year). About 250 applicants were notified immediately that they would not be admitted. At the same time approximately 250 candidates were chosen for admission, about half of whom had been promised admission earlier in the year. This meant that the 100 to 125 additional applicants still to be granted certificates of admission had to be chosen from the remaining 600. (As in recent years, about 350 to 375 were admitted, ultimately resulting in a class of 210 or 220.) Here the process of selection became a great deal more difficult. The differences among these 600 candidates were less distinct, and decisions became more involved and more time-consuming.

In some cases the necessity of waiting for results of the College Board Examinations for those candidates who took the March tests did not permit earlier decisions. The applications of all sons of alumni, as well as the applications which posed special problems, were reviewed by the entire Committee on Admissions (the President, the Dean, the Director of Admissions, and five members of the teaching faculty).

Requests for financial aid were more numerous this year than in 1958, but there has been no increase in scholarship resources. The result was greater difficulty of decision in this area, too. Once again Bowdoin compared financial aid information with about a dozen colleges with which it has many candidates in common, colleges such as Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, Amherst, Williams, and Wesleyan.

Certificates of admission (acceptances) were mailed the week of April 20. The elimination of appointments and interviews during April of this year cleared the way for committee meetings (selection and financial aid) and eased the constantly-increasing time pressures in the admissions process.

This year, according to Director of Admissions Hubert S. Shaw '36, alumni groups and individual Bowdoin men provided even greater assistance than in the past. The Admissions staff is grateful for this increasing alumni co-operation and support.

On The Campus

Winter sports continued to follow the pattern outlined in the February ALUMNUS. The varsity squads, which at mid-years had a record of five wins, 25 losses, and one tie, finished with a mark of 10 victories, 42 defeats, and one tie. The freshmen, on the other hand, with a mark of 14 and two at midyears, ended with 31 wins and 11 losses.

The varsity basketball team upset Rutgers in the Downeast Classic at Bangor 67 to 66 but lost its other 23 starts. The hockey squad won seven, lost 11, and tied one, defeating Merrimack twice, M.I.T. twice, Tufts, Massachusetts, and the Alumni, and tying a strong Hamilton sextet 3 to 3. The most resounding defeat was at the hands of Colby 14 to 3 on February 25.

The varsity swimmers won two meets, against Trinity and Tufts, and dropped five, while the track team lost all three of its dual meets, despite the individual excellence of Captain Larry Wilkins of Belmont, Mass., who swept the 40 yard dash and both hurdle events against Maine, Bates, and Boston College for a total of 45 points in the three meets. This effort represented one-third of the 137 points the Polar Bears garnered all season. Wilkins won the Jack Magee Trophy for "the most outstanding single performance" in the Interfraternity Meet, when he raced 440 yards in 50.8 seconds, thereby setting not only a new meet record but also a new Bowdoin College indoor record and a new Bowdoin Cage mark.

Wilkins also received the Elmer Hutchinson Trophy for "high conduct both on and off the field of sport." In true Jack Magee tradition, he never competed in a track meet until he came to Bowdoin. Last May he tied the State Meet mark in the 220 yard low hurdles with a clocking of 23.8 seconds.

Senior Bob Fritz of Bay Village, Ohio,

Rear Admiral Donald B. MacMillan '98 will sail his veteran Arctic schooner BOWDOIN to Mystic Seaport in Connecticut on June 27, and the BOWDOIN will be enshrined there at the Mystic Marine Museum.

The 80-foot BOWDOIN will tie up permanently alongside other ships that have made heroic maritime history. Off her bow will be the CHARLES W. MORGAN, last of the New Bedford whalers. Astern will be the lofty square-rigged training ship JOSEPH CONRAD.

The BOWDOIN, built in 1920-21 at East Boothbay, has made 26 trips into northern waters, covering some 300,000 miles, visiting Labrador, Hudson Bay, Foxe Basin, Baffin Island, Iceland, the east and west coasts of Greenland, North Greenland, and Ellesmere Island.

A gift to Mystic Seaport from the MacMillans, numerous Bowdoin alumni, and friends from all over the country, the ship will be outfitted just as if she were ready to leave on another Arctic voyage, with blankets on the bunks and a cribbage board on the cabin table. In addition, Cap'n Mac himself will be aboard for several weeks to tell the public about his schooner.

became the second recipient of the Hugh Munro, Jr., Memorial Trophy as the hockey player who "best exemplifies the qualities of loyalty and courage which Hugh Munro, Jr., demonstrated at Bowdoin and in the service of his country." During his three years as varsity goalie Fritz compiled the amazing total of 1252 saves. In the 1957-58 season, when Bowdoin needed another forward, he skated in that position for three or four games and scored several points.

To return to the Class of 1962 — the freshmen won seven and lost three in basketball, they won 11 and dropped four in hockey, they had a six and three mark in swimming, and they came out on top in three out of four track meets. There is definitely help there for the varsity squads, not just for next year but for the next three years. This is particularly true in hockey, swimming, and basketball.

In fact, it would not be surprising if three of this year's freshmen were in the starting basketball lineup next season and four in hockey. The swimming team, hampered by a lack of depth this year, should come back strong in 1959.

The Alumni hockey squad, flushed with its 4 to 3 successes of 1957 and 1958, tried valiantly to make it three in a row over the varsity, but their effort fell short by a score of 9 to 4 on February 28. Some 15 Alumni returned to show flashes of their college brilliance.

Olympic and world's champion skater Hayes Alan Jenkins returned to the College for the third time in a year to star in "The Winter Garden," an original musical ice show presented at the Arena on March 21 and 22 by the Skating Club of Brunswick. More than 70 enthusiastic skaters from a dozen or more towns within a 60-mile radius of Brunswick took part. Approximately 2800 people turned out to watch.

Following "The Winter Garden" the long process of melting and drying the Arena was started, in order that two weeks later Don Budge and Bobby Riggs, two of the top tennis players of all time, could stage a clinic for coaches and players, followed by an exhibition match.

It was a varied winter season, with many disappointments and many hopes for the future. It will be another eight months before the hopes are realized or come crashing down. It is the feeling around campus that they will be realized, for the freshmen represent the best class in every way, scholastically as well as athletically, that Bowdoin has had for some time.

Watson Appointed Coach

Sid Watson of Andover, Mass., former Northeastern University sports standout, has been appointed Coach of Hockey and Assistant Coach of Football at Bowdoin. Since December 30 he had been Acting Coach of Hockey, having taken over from Nels Corey '39 when the latter was appointed Coach of Football.

Watson starred in both hockey and football at Northeastern, being selected a defenseman on the All-New England hockey team and a halfback on the All-New England football team. He has played four seasons of professional football, three years with the Pittsburgh Steelers and one with the Washington Redskins, and the Redskins had invited him to return for the 1959 season.

Center For Economic Research

A Center for Economic Research has been established within the Department of Economics at Bowdoin to carry out fundamental research on the State of Maine and to collect and publish information concerning the Maine economy.

Establishment of the Center makes possible the continuation of work begun several years ago by members of the Department of Economics. In 1954 an active interest in problems of the Maine economy led to the formation of the Maine College Community Research Program by Bowdoin, Bates, Colby, the University of Maine, and business leaders in the state. Chester G. Abbott '13 of Portland served as chairman of the program from its inception.

The MCCR, sponsored by the Committee for Economic Development and The Ford Foundation, made possible the completion of several studies about specific aspects of the Maine economy. In addition, under the auspices of this organization, the Maine Business Index and the Maine Business Indicators were compiled and published at Bowdoin.

Alumni Secretary Seward J. Marsh entered the Maine Medical Center in Portland for observation late in January and several weeks later underwent surgery for gallstones. He returned to Brunswick late in February and is making a satisfactory (to his doctors) but slow (to him) recovery at his home at 3 Bath Street. He hopes to return to the office soon. Many of his friends among the alumni have written to him and sent cards. For these messages of encouragement he is grateful. In typical fashion he and Mrs. Marsh are attempting to acknowledge each message.

With the completion of the original Research Program, the continuation of the Maine Business Indicators has been made possible by further financial support of firms and individuals throughout the state. The new program of economic research will be financed by gifts made to Bowdoin specifically for that purpose.

Professor James A. Storer is Executive Director of The Center for Economic Research, and Professor Giulio Pontecorvo is Associate Executive Director.

"Hig" Dies

George W. Higgins, a familiar figure at Bowdoin since 1907 and head of the

"HIG"

Carpenter Shop for 34 years, died February 16 at his home on Maine Street after a short illness. He was 77 years old.

"Hig" joined the maintenance staff in 1907. He was janitor of the Hyde Athletic Building for 12 years before transferring to the carpentry section. It was he who built the first bleachers for Whittier Field, the first radio booth there, and the first steam tunnels on the campus. Known to generations of Bowdoin men, he had missed only two Commencements since 1907.

The Palmer Fund

The late Harry L. Palmer '04 of Skowhegan, who for nearly 25 years served as a member of the Board of Overseers, has been honored by the establishment of the Harry L. Palmer Fund by the gifts of several of his friends. Income from the fund will be used for the upkeep of pianos in Harvey Dow Gibson Hall of Music and for the purchase of recordings for Gibson Hall.

From January of 1949 until June of 1953, Mr. Palmer served as Executive Director of the Sesquicentennial Fund, which raised a total of more than four million dollars to help meet the capital needs of the College. Always deeply interested in Bowdoin affairs, he was elected to the Board of Overseers in 1934. He resigned in June of 1957 and was named Overseer Emeritus. In 1934 he received the Alumni Achievement Award, and at Commencement in June of 1951 he was awarded the honorary degree of master of arts. He died at his home in Skowhegan on November 3, 1957.

A Report From Africa

Professor-Emeritus Alfred O. Gross H'52 spent the winter months touring Africa with Mrs. Gross and Mrs. Paul Nixon. On April 8 he celebrated his 76th birthday. Shortly before this he wrote to a faculty colleague, in part, "If I were younger, I would certainly come again. Last week we had two wonderful days at the famous flamingo colony at Lake Nakuro, located about 90 miles northwest of Nairobi in Kenya. I have never seen such a magnificent concentration of birds. There are said to be over a million flamingoes, and, having seen for myself, I am convinced that this is a conservative estimate.

"On March 25-26 we will be at Tree Tops, a unique hotel built high in a giant fig tree over a water hole that is visited each evening by rhinos, elephants, and other big game.

"The trip to Africa has been beyond all our expectations. The Garden trip via automobile with a guide-driver was a great revelation. The scenery, vegetation, flowers, birds, and native life were of great interest. From Denbau we flew to Victoria Falls, where we spent four days seeing the falls from every vantage point. We took a small plane to fly us back and forth over the falls, which gave us unexcelled opportunities to photograph the mile-long falls and the awe-inspiring canyons.

"We took a launch trip on the Zambezi River, where we saw herds of hippos, crocodiles, and countless birds. A landing was made on an island alive with monkeys. Mrs. Nixon was bitten by one of the more aggressive individuals when she attempted to feed them. She was given first aid and is now all right.

"One morning the passengers were chased off the island by a herd of vicious African elephants (not the circus variety). At Victoria Falls Mrs. Nixon left the trail to get a better view and was met by a cobra all poised and ready to strike — a narrow escape. The same day a 16-foot python was captured at the Victoria Falls Hotel after it had swallowed three adult chickens which never reached the dining room.

"The night before we left Victoria a troop of baboons appeared out of the forest jungle. Mrs. Nixon and Mrs. Gross were throwing out food to attract them nearer my camera. Instead of coming near to me they dashed toward the ladies. I never knew they could run so fast. It was funny!"

Following a stop in Zanzibar and a trip down the east coast of Africa to Cape Town, the Grosses and Mrs. Nixon will return home. Their ship is due to arrive in Montreal, Canada, the middle of May.

A Danforth Grant

The College has received a grant of $10,000 from The Danforth Foundation of St. Louis, Mo., to be used for faculty summer study during the next three years, beginning this summer. Professor Myron A. Jeppesen has been named chairman of the faculty committee in charge of individual grants under this program. Other members of the committee are Professors Albert Abrahamson '26, Nathan Dane II '37, Ernst C. Helmreich, and James M. Moulton.

Glee Club Draws Praise

The Glee Club was enthusiastically received on its spring tour, which began at the Brunswick Naval Air Station on March 20 and continued on successive days at Houlton, Fredericton, New Brunswick; Lubec, Bar Harbor, and Waterville. The Daily Gleaner in Fredericton commented on the concert there in these words: "It would be an understatement to say that the Bowdoin College Glee Club received an enthusiastic welcome in Fredericton yesterday. Memorial Hall at the University of New Brunswick was jammed for the performance, and late

The Top Ten

Two years ago the Directors of the Alumni Fund mailed each alumnus a reprint from Newsweek listing the top ten men's colleges in the United States as selected by Chesly Manly of the Chicago Tribune.

Listed below are the same ten men's colleges, with the results of the 1957-58 Alumni Fund for each. In amount of giving, Bowdoin was fifth, behind the University of the South, Amherst, Williams, and Union. In percentage of alumni contributing, Bowdoin again ranked fifth, behind Amherst, Hamilton, Haverford, and Williams.

Is this where Bowdoin men believe their college belongs? If not, it is within the power of each alumnus to improve Bowdoin's standing in each classification. No one but each individual alumnus can raise the percentage of contributors. And he can do it only by sending in his gift by June 30.

The ten colleges are listed below in order of the Tribune's ratings.

College	Amount Given	Percentage of Alumni Giving
1. Haverford	$ 91,295	52.1%
2. Amherst	239,356	59.8%
3. Kenyon	76,402	31.2%
4. Wesleyan	113,682	42.8%
5. Hamilton	83,727	52.6%
6. Union	183,604	31.3%
7. Bowdoin	147,670	49.8%
8. University of the South	842,899	17.4%
9. Washington and Lee	113,682	35.3%
10. Williams	238,580	50.1%

comers were provided with 'standing room only' for the concert, which UNB officials say was the best supported of the 1958-59 series.

"The 72-voice men's chorus gave a superb account of themselves during the evening. This reviewer has witnessed coordination and control of this calibre on only one previous occasion, at a Canadian performance of the Berlin Philharmonic."

During the sabbatical leave of Professor Tillotson this semester, Professor Robert K. Beckwith is directing the Glee Club.

Garcelon And Merritt Scholars

This year 36 medical school students have been awarded a total of $8800 from the Garcelon and Merritt Fund, established in memory of Dr. Seward Garcelon and Dr. Samuel Merritt, both nineteenth-century graduates of the former Maine Medical School at Bowdoin. In the past 37 years more than $280,000 has been granted from this fund to well over 400 young men, who now practice medicine throughout the United States.

This year's awards went to students at 15 medical schools. The recipients come from seven states. Twenty of the men are graduates of Bowdoin, five of the University of Maine, two each of Colby, Holy Cross, and Xavier, and one each of Bates, Dartmouth, Harvard, Rutgers, and Tufts.

Nine of the men are studying at Vermont, six at Tufts, three each at McGill and Yale, two each at Columbia, Cornell, Dalhousie, and Pennsylvania, and one each at Boston University, Harvard, New York Medical School, North Carolina, Ottawa, Southwestern, and Stanford.

Twenty-six of the recipients are residents of Maine, four are from Massachusetts, two from New Hampshire, and one each from California, New Jersey, Maryland, and Rhode Island.

Placement News

In a memorandum to placement committees and faculty members on February 25, Placement Bureau Director Samuel A. Ladd jr. '29 stated, "Despite the curious paradox of more jobs and an increase in unemployment, conditions appear favorable for the graduate of 1959, with salaries higher than during 1958.

"A recent survey of 71 placement directors at colleges and universities throughout the country indicates that companies will be seeking more graduates in engineering and the sciences and approximately the same number in liberal arts. There is some further indication that job needs among the nation's major industries are steadily rising and may result in increased demand in the late spring."

Director Of Student Aid

Philip S. Wilder '23, Assistant to the President, has been named to the additional position of Director of Student Aid. In this new position he will have overall responsibility for Bowdoin's program of financial aid to students — including scholarships, loans, and campus jobs.

A native of Newton Centre, Mass., Mr. Wilder has been at Bowdoin in one capacity or another since 1927, when he became Acting Alumni Secretary. From 1928 until 1932 he served as both Alumni Secretary and Instructor in Education. During the next 14 years he was Alumni Secretary and Assistant Professor of Education, and since 1946 he has been Assistant to the President.

Mr. Wilder, who is also Foreign Student Adviser and Fulbright Adviser at Bowdoin, is a member of the Institute of International Education's Advisory Committee on the Liberal Arts College in the U.S.A. and a member of the board of directors of the National Association of Foreign Student Advisers.

Scholars: Honors And Records

On February 9 four seniors were initiated as members of the Bowdoin Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa. The newly-elected members are Edward I. Garick of Hempstead, N. Y., Howard R. Mettler of Brooklyn, N. Y., Richard E. Morgan of Alexandria, Va., and J. Skelton Williams Jr. of Richmond, Va.

During the fall semester four undergraduates achieved straight "A" grades: G. Raymond Babineau '59 and Edward I. Garick '59, both of Hempstead, N. Y., Richard E. Morgan '59 of Alexandria, Va., and Theodore A. Perry '60 of Waterville. Interestingly enough, Babineau, Garick, and Morgan are all graduates of Hempstead High School.

As a result of first-semester achievement, 175 undergraduates are on the Dean's List for the spring semester. Included are 51 seniors, 55 juniors, 30 sophomores, 36 freshmen, and three Bowdoin Plan students.

Three seniors are among 1200 American and Canadian students named in March as Woodrow Wilson Fellows by the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation in Princeton, N. J. Backed by a Ford Foundation grant of $25,000,000, the Wilson Fellowships are one-year awards reserved for young scholars showing "marked promise for the teaching profession and possessing the highest qualities of intellect, character, and personality." The Bowdoin seniors selected as Fellows are Edward I. Garick, Richard E. Morgan, and J. Skelton Williams Jr.

Waterville High School has won the Abraxas Cup, given each year to the secondary school whose graduates attained the best academic grades at Bowdoin during the first semester of their freshman year. To be eligible, a school must have at least three representatives. Finishing in second place was Brookline (Mass.) High School. Mount Hermon School was third, Scarsdale (N. Y.) High School fourth, and Hebron Academy fifth.

Mrs. Doris Pike White, widow of the late Ashmead White '12, was elected President General of the Daughters of the American Revolution on April 23 in Washington, D. C. She is the first woman from Maine ever to head the D.A.R. and the first President General from New England in 27 years.

Mrs. White's predecessor in office traveled 87,000 miles in her three-year term.

The First Skolfield Professor

Professor Albert Abrahamson '26, Chairman of the Department of Economics, has been named the first George Lincoln Skolfield, Jr. Professor at Bowdoin. Professor Abrahamson has been a member of the Bowdoin faculty since 1928, with frequent leaves of absence to serve in various government posts, most of them in Washington, D. C. He served as an economist for the President's Cabinet Committee on Policy in 1934-35; as WPA Administrator for Maine from 1935 to 1937; as Assistant Executive Director of the War Refugee Board in 1944-45; and as Special Assistant to the Secretary of Labor in 1945-46. In 1950 he was a consultant to W. Stuart Symington, Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, and the following year he served as consultant to the President's Materials Policy Commission. Since 1956 Professor Abrahamson has been a consultant to the National Manpower Council. He is also a member of the State of Maine Panel of Mediators and is Chairman of the Maine Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission.

The Skolfield professorship was established last June in honor of George L. Skolfield, Jr. of the Class of 1913. It was made possible by part of the Solon E. and Lida Skolfield Turner Fund of more than $732,000, which came to the College in 1949 from the Lida S. Turner estate.

Mr. Skolfield, a native of Brunswick, was for many years an engineer in California. Since his death in 1941, Mrs. Skolfield has made her home in Brunswick.

A Silver Anniversary

On March 12 three student-written one-act plays were presented in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. The occasion was the 25th anniversary of the One-Act Play Contest. Three previous winners returned to judge the productions: Peter Poor '50, director-manager of the Straight Wharf Theater at Nantucket, Mass.; Donald Carlo '51, teacher of history and English at Coburn Classical Institute in Waterville; and Benjamin G. M. Priest '56 of Bath.

The Faculty Play

On April 2 and 3 members of the faculty and staff and their wives presented two performances of Molière's The Misanthrope in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. The first faculty play since 1954, this production included such well-known Bowdoin people as Professor and Mrs. Richard L. Chittim '41, Philip S. Wilder '23, and Professors Fritz C. A. Koelln and Jeffrey J. Carre '40. It was directed by Professor George H. Quinby '23.

Bowdoin Debaters

By mid-March Bowdoin debaters had compiled a record of 52 wins in 64 debates, one of the best victory percentages in intercollegiate ranks. They won first place at the University of Vermont tournament last November and in February took top honors at the Boston University tournament. In addition, they tied for first in the St. Anselm's College novice tournament in December and tied for second at the Tufts University competition that same month. The affirmative team was selected as the best affirmative pair at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology tournament in February.

Four debaters spent their spring vacation in an unusual way. They presented exhibition debates for high school audiences and other groups in Connecti-

You Can Help

Do YOU know of a scholarship fund in your town or city which might be awarded, from time to time, to a Bowdoin student? If you do, please pass the information along to Mr. Philip S. Wilder, Director of Student Aid, Massachusetts Hall.

Any information you can furnish about local scholarship funds will be helpful. In many respects such information may be as valuable as gifts of money toward scholarships.

To illustrate the range of local scholarships, in Portland there are awards offered by the Guy Gannett Publishing Company, the National Council of Jewish Women, the South Portland Kiwanis Club, the Women's Literary Union, the Summit Community Club, the Portland Rossini Club, and so forth.

cut, New York, and New Jersey. The four, who were accompanied by Professor Albert R. Thayer '22, were Alan R. Baker '62 of Great Neck, N. Y., Frank C. Mahncke '60 of Morristown, N. J., Alfred E. Schretter '59 of Florham Park, N. J., and Peter S. Smith '60 of Durham, N. H.

Library Group Formed

A group of students, sparked by members of the Student Library Committee, have just formed the Friends of the Bowdoin Library Association. The purposes of the organization are to stimulate interest in the Library as the heart of the College, to encourage and facilitate contributions to the Library, and to aid its work in any way possible.

Membership in the Friends of the Bowdoin Library Association is open to students, faculty, alumni, and friends of the College. There is an annual membership fee of fifty cents, and each year members are expected to give either a book or a sum of money in excess of $2.50 to the Library. Sheldon Christian '37, who instructs students interested in operating the Hubbard Hall Press, is printing a special bookplate, which pictures an engraving of Henry W. Longfellow, made while he was Librarian at Bowdoin. The bookplate was designed by Mr. Christian and Guy Davis '59 of Toledo, Ohio, chairman of the Student Library Committee.

Through the efforts of the Student Library Committee the Library will soon receive the gift of $100 worth of books from Time magazine. To win the gift members of the committee collected and assembled pieces of a puzzle which had been distributed to every student at the College.

Three Summer Seminars

Residents and guests in the Brunswick region will be able to take advantage of three special seminars this summer at Bowdoin, to be offered for five weeks, beginning July 6 and ending August 7. Concurrent with the four summer institutes in science and mathematics, they will be partially filled by members of the families of teachers who are at the College studying in the institutes.

Professor Philip C. Beam, Chairman of the Art Department, will offer a course in modern art — a series of lectures and discussions on contemporary paintings, sculpture, and architecture, illustrated with slides. Professor Beam will meet members of the seminar from 10:45 to 11:45 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings.

"The Contemporary Novel" is the title of a seminar to be conducted by Professor Lawrence S. Hall '36 of the English Department. It will be a study of the worlds of Hemingway, Fitzgerald, Greene, Cozzens, and Camus. Dr. Hall will meet his group from 9 until 12 in the morning every Tuesday.

Professor Robert K. Beckwith of the Music Department will lead a seminar in "Symphonic and Choral Music," a study of the choral and symphonic literature of eleven composers from Bach to Stravinsky, supplemented by recordings in the classroom. The group will meet on Mondays and Wednesdays from 9 to 10:30 in the morning.

These seminars are open to both men and women. No previous formal study in these fields is required. Since there are no papers or examinations, no academic credit will be given. There will be a fee of $25 for each seminar. Application may be made by letter, addressed to Mr. A. L. Greason, Coordinator of Summer Programs, Bowdoin College.

Gifts

George V. Craighead '25 has provided funds for the purchase of a number of filmstrips. These visual aids, which will be used for instruction in several departments at Bowdoin, have been presented in memory of Mr. Craighead's brother, Samuel Judson Craighead.

The College has received an unrestricted gift of $1,575 under the program of the First National City Bank of New York for the support of privately controlled institutions of higher learning. The gift was made in behalf of five Bowdoin graduates who have each completed at least five years of service with the bank or who were officers at the close of 1958. These alumni are James C. Donan '50, John L. Ivers '52, Roger Pearson '42, Kenneth K. Rounds '28, and Thomas C. Shortell '49.

K.C.M.S MEMORIES

Professor Herbert Brown is at work on a full-bodied biography of Kenneth Charles Morton Sills (1879-1954). He welcomes as collaborators all those who knew K.C.M.S. and cherish memories of him as student, teacher, Dean, and President: his conversations in Massachusetts Hall, his hospitality at 85 Federal Street, his "asides" in "Casey's Lit.," his chapel talks and public addresses, and details of his multifarious services to church, college, and commonwealth. Professor Brown is especially eager to have the privilege of reading letters written by the President. Such documents will be used scrupulously, and acknowledged and returned promptly. He hopes that the friends of K.C.M.S. will regard nothing as too trivial or impressionistic to send along: anecdotes, characteristic phrases and gestures, table-talk and solicitudes, undergraduate attitudes, impressions, hunches, tones, and over-tones. Professor Brown's Brunswick address is Hubbard Hall, Bowdoin College.

Alumni Clubs

BOSTON

Secretary Dick Brackett '50 reports that the Bowdoin Club of Boston held a very successful meeting on Saturday, February 28, at the Woodland Country Club in West Newton. About 180 Bowdoin men and their wives attended.

President Coles spoke informally on the state of the College, and Carl de Suze '38 entertained the group with films of his recent European trip and with his usual witty commentary.

Elections were held with these results: President, Bob Bell '42; First Vice President, Jack Gazlay '34; Second Vice President, Don Lukens '46; Treasurer, John Morrell '52; and Secretary, Dick Brackett '50. Directors elected for three-year terms were Grant Dowse '35, Bruce Cay '49, and Archie Howe '50. Dick Lee '24, Jack Lawrence '37, and Guy Hunt '40 were elected directors for two-year terms. Earle Cook '17, Walker Merrill '50, and Bob Forsberg '53 were chosen as directors for one year.

Plans are going forward for "Bowdoin Night at the Pops" on Thursday, May 14. Table seats are $3.00 and $3.50 each. Reservations should be made early, preferably by the first of May, with Robert R. Forsberg '53, 125 Perkins Avenue, Brockton, Mass. Checks should be made payable to the Bowdoin Club of Boston.

BRUNSWICK

On February 9 the officers of the Bowdoin Club of Brunswick mailed a report to their constituents, telling about the 27 subfreshmen who had been entertained by the club on October 29. Twelve had applied for admission, and one or two more were expected to make application. A summary of each candidate's qualifications was included, as well as a copy of an appreciative letter written by one of the subfreshmen shortly after the fall meeting.

CLEVELAND

The Bowdoin Club of Cleveland held its spring dinner meeting at the Union Club on March 25, with 25 present, including alumni, undergraduates, and subfreshmen. Dean Kendrick brought current news of the College.

New officers elected were as follows: President, Virgil Bond '37; Secretary-Treasurer, Peter Relic '58; Council Member, Oliver Emerson '49.

DETROIT

Vice President Bela Norton '18 was the guest at a small, informal luncheon meeting on March 12 at the Detroit Club. The gathering was arranged at a late date when it was discovered that Mr. Norton would have a few free hours in Detroit between business calls. Present were William Norton '05 (host for the group), Stanley Dole '47 (President of the Bowdoin Club of Detroit), George Cutter '27, Jim Norton '31, Robert Inman '11, and John Butler '50.

MILWAUKEE

At its midwinter meeting on February 27 the Alumni Council voted to recognize the Bowdoin Club of Milwaukee. Richard M. Lamport '32 is its first Convener and Council Member. He is interested to hear from Bowdoin men who have moved to the area or who are going to be in Milwaukee from time to time. His address is c/o Union Refrigerator Transit Lines, Station F, Green Bay Road, Milwaukee 9, Wis.

NEW YORK

On January 23 the Bowdoin Club of New York held its annual dinner meeting at the Manhattan Club. Some 120 alumni heard talks by President James Coles and Coaches Nels Corey '39 and Bob Donham.

Elections were held, resulting in these new officers: President, Carleton Connor '36; Vice Presidents, Arthur Fischer '38, Lawrence Read '26, and Richard Van Varick '32; Secretary, George Griggs '41, Assistant Secretaries, Daniel Dayton '49 and Edward Early '49; Treasurer, John Stafford '52; Assistant Treasurer, Harold Sewall '51; and Council Member, Stevens Frost '42.

New York alumni hope to continue the practice of suburban meetings. Within the past year or two successful gatherings have been staged in Long Island and Westchester County, and hopes are high for another one next fall.

PHILADELPHIA

Approximately 75 alumni and wives and several subfreshmen gathered in the Dolly Madison Room of the Presidential Apartments for a social hour and dinner on January 24. The Bowdoin Club of Philadelphia had as its special guests President James Coles and Coaches Nels Corey '39 and Bob Donham, each of whom spoke following the meal.

PITTSBURGH

Dean Kendrick was a special guest of the Bowdoin Club of Pittsburgh on Tuesday, March 24. About 20 alumni, wives, undergraduates, and parents gathered at the H-Y-P Club for a 6:30 social hour and dinner. The Dean brought news of the College and latest campus happenings.

PORTLAND

The weekly luncheon meetings on the first Wednesday of every month at the Cumberland Club continue to be successful and well attended. Professor James Storer was the club's guest on March 4, and on April 1 Vice President Bela Norton '18 represented the College. Professor LeRoy Greason will speak on May 6 about Bowdoin's four summer institutes.

Plans are going forward for the annual spring dinner meeting at Valle's Scarborough Restaurant on Tuesday, May 5. President Coles will report on the state of the College,

ST. PETERSBURG

Convener Charles Lincoln '91 reports a successful February 19 meeting with 17 in attendance. In addition to two out-of-town visitors, Professor-Emeritus Thomas Van Cleve H'54 and Harald Rehder '29, those attending were Fessenden '95, Marston '99, Haley '07, Newman '09, Brummett '11, Pope '11, Redfern '11, Emerson '11, Barbour '12, Conant '13, Kennedy '13, Fogg M'14, Tarbox '14, and Hawthorne '29, as well as the Convener. No speeches or songs, but everyone had a good time talking things over.

On March 19, despite heavy rain and temperatures in the sixties, 11 showed up: Fessenden '95, Haley '07, Weston '08, Webster '10, Deering M'10, Conant '13, Kennedy '13, Sewall '13, Mooers '18, Nevins '18, and Convener "Doc" Lincoln '91. A final meeting is scheduled in April, with "the festivities to resume in the fall."

WASHINGTON

Retiring President William Johnson '30 presided and the Honorable Robert Hale '10 served as Toastmaster at the annual spring dinner meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Washington at the Continental Hotel on April 2. About forty alumni, wives, and special guests gathered for a pleasant evening. Seated with others at the head table were Justice Harold Burton '09 and the Honorable Owen Brewster '09, both of whom spoke. Mrs. May Craig, Washington representative of the Gannett newspapers, was a special guest.

President James Coles, the featured speaker of the evening, brought news of the College and spoke of the problems that educational institutions (in general) and privately endowed colleges (in particular) must face in the foreseeable future.

As a result of elections, the Washington club has these new officers: President, Robert McCarty '41; Vice President, David Dickson '48; Secretary, William Dougherty '46; Treasurer, David Marsh '51; Council Member, Edward Hudon '37; and Program Chairman, Raymond Jensen '48.

Bowdoin Browsing

When not browsing about the stacks, the author of this issue's "Bowdoin Browsing" can be found teaching French in Cleaveland Hall. Gerard J. Brault is a graduate of Assumption College (Worcester, Mass.) and holds a master of arts degree in French from Laval University. In 1951 he enlisted in the U. S. Army, where he served as a special agent with the Counter Intelligence Corps in France, being stationed in what he calls "the progressively less sensitive" field offices in Orleans, Bordeaux, and La Rochelle.

Upon his return to civilian status he spent two and one-half years at the University of Pennsylvania, where he majored in Romance philology and medieval French literature and from which he holds a Ph.D. degree in Romance Languages. With his family he spent a year in Strasbourg, France, before he joined the faculty at Bowdoin as Instructor in French in September of 1957.

Dr. Brault is a member of the International Arthurian Society and the Modern Language Association. Alumni will remember his article "The Sun on the Seal" in the December ALUMNUS.

I am not quite sure that I would translate flâner in this quotation as "to browse," but with a little semantic indulgence (and with apologies to Monsieur Balzac) I feel that the reader will agree that browsing may indeed be defined as "the gastronomy of the eye." Actually, flâner in French more often has the meaning of "to stroll, to idle" and flâneur is a term sometimes used to describe a "lazy person." Surely, incorrigible browsers such as you and I will scarcely allow our favorite pastime to be thus characterized. The French, to be sure, are as inclined to browsing as we are, but the expression they love best to define this pleasure is bouquiner, a verb which invariably evokes the delights of perusing old books and especially those wonderful second-hand bargains under the indulgent but ever-watchful eye of the bouquiniste along the quais of the river Seine. In the following paragraphs, I should like to describe a few new books in the Bowdoin Library which are admirably suited for general browsing.

One of the most fascinating books I have stumbled across in recent years is The Oxford Dictionary of Nursery Rhymes edited by Iona and Peter Opie. We all remember "Little Miss Muffet" and her traumatic experience, the discouraging revelations of "What are little boys made of?", and the plight of the old woman "who lived in a shoe" from our childhood days, and most of us have puzzled over the significance of "Mary, Mary, quite contrary" and wondered about the propriety of reading the grisly verse about "Three blind mice" to our children before they go to bed at night. But we cannot deny the pleasure we've had in discovering intriguing new rhymes and in rediscovering old favorites between the dawn and the daylight, when the evening's beginning to lower. Here now is a scholarly study of no less than 550 nursery rhymes, in each case presenting the oldest known version (at least a quarter and very likely over one half are more than 200 years old, we learn) and a number of variants with a concise, critical survey of the diverse explanations that have been offered down through the years. We discover, for example, that the identity of "Old King Cole" was already a subject for speculation in the reign of Queen Anne and that at least two monographs have been devoted exclusively to the interpretation of "This is the house that Jack built." The widely-circulated myth identifying "Mother Goose" with a certain Mistress Elizabeth Goose, widow of one Isaac Goose (Vergoose or Vertigoose) of Boston, Massachusetts, is again exploded but will doubtless pop up again in the Sunday supplement. After examining countless suggestions ranging from the wildest harebrained notions of indefatigable crackpots to the cautious textual analyses of professional philologists, the editors usually conclude that very little is actually known about the meaning of nursery rhymes. Just think, we may never know just "Who killed Cock Robin?"

In 1950 the University of Michigan Press published the late Morris Palmer Tilley's Dictionary of the Proverbs in England in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries, which set a new standard of excellence for this related field of investigation. Tilley presented an exhaustive study of 11,780 proverbs, a veritable treasure-trove for the literary investigator and a pure delight for the inveterate browser. We are all apprised of the inadvisability of crying over spilt milk, for instance, but we've lost sight of milk says to wine, Welcome, friend and if you would live forever you must wash the milk from your liver, both apparently quite popular in the seventeenth century. We are familiar with rain, rain, go away, but zounds! what about when the rain rains and the goose winks little wots the gosling what the goose thinks? As green as grass we are prone to say, but did you know that grass grows not in hot ovens?

Professors Archer Taylor and Bartlett Jere Whiting, not to be outdone, recently published A Dictionary of American Proverbs 1820-1880 covering the years which witnessed the flowering of regional literature and popular sketches and tales in dialect in the United States. We are provided with a new insight into the mind of this fascinating era when confronted with such gems of wisdom as old fish and young uns don't gi along in double harniss and the harder a man works on a Coast-of-Maine farm, the worse he is off. Our ancestors certainly did not lack in wit with such ready expressions as a sneaking critter with a face like a jack-knife, she was as bald as a jug, and a small sprinkling of the feminine gender, jest enough to take the cuss off and no more.

Most of us have at some time or other been attracted to books about Gothic architecture (the lavish illustrations are a sure trap for browsers), but the accompanying text was often too skimpy to invite further perusal or too panegyric to suit our taste. Allan Temko's Notre-Dame of Paris is one of the most exciting epics about artistic creation that I have ever read. Solidly documented, replete with full-page photographs, this book reveals a Notre-Dame that few people, even the hardy souls who climb its very towers, have ever experienced. Perhaps the reason that this book has yet to be checked out of the Library is that very often, when attracted to a story such as this one, browsers are metamorphosed into one-legged, stack-leaning, honest-to-goodness, all-afternoon book-readers.

Professor Woodruff's time was occupied with an extra course in Bible study for the seniors, so a tutor was engaged to help him out — C. L. Brownson, a recent Yale graduate. The Orient was sure that he would find Bowdoin students a "gentlemanly and enthusiastic set of fellows disposed to do the square thing every time."

The College joined thirteen other New England colleges in forming a commission on admission examinations. Bowdoin continued to be almost alone among New England colleges in requiring entrance examinations from everybody — that is, everybody except graduates of three small preparatory schools which had a special status of close relationship with the College.

According to the Orient, the name of the author of "Phi Chi," E. P. Mitchell '71, appeared for the first time in an issue of the Boston Evening Record of January 12, 1889, giving hazing stories from various colleges.

The history of the Peucinian and Athenaeon Societies was recounted in the Orient in the first two January issues by C. S. F. Lincoln '91 — now Bowdoin's beloved "Dr. Lincoln." The Peucinian was senior in age and more distinguished in standing. The junior Athenaeon had a somewhat checkered career.

According to the Orient, George Seco (a well known Brunswick character) was removed from the running track by "Doc Whit" after Seco had covered six miles in one hour and fifteen minutes on a bet of $1.00 that he could walk twenty miles in five hours.

In January Professor Robinson moved with his family to their new residence, which is now St. Charles rectory. The Bath Sentinel named it the "house of eight gables."

A bill was introduced into the legislature to tax literary institutions, notwithstanding the implications of the state constitution to the contrary. Of course, it came to nothing — as is only too likely to be the case with reference to the opposite suggestion under consideration by the legislature of 1959 that exemption from taxation should be extended to fraternity houses.

It stormed as usual on the day of college prayer. Thus the most of the college was deprived of the opportunity to have an enjoyable day of outdoor activities.

The Reverend E. C. Guild, the cultured minister of the short-lived Unitarian Church, located where the Church of Christ now is on Federal Street, gave the opening lecture to the Medical School. He took as his subject "The Ethical Side of the Physician's Life." His remark that one can't "buy cheer and comfort at a drug store" caused a ripple of amusement from those in the audience who were acquainted with the reason for the existence of some of the Brunswick drug stores. Mr. Guild also gave several lectures during the winter on literary subjects which were well attended.

One of the few other lectures of the winter season was by William Blaikie. Upper Massachusetts Hall was filled with listeners, first to his talk on "How to Get Strong" and then to "A Talk to Men Only." Mr. Blaikie was a distinguished New York lawyer who had written two popular works on physical training.

Several of the few social gatherings that were held during the winter occurred on the same evening, February 28 — Glee Club concert in Portland, drama at the Franklin School in Topsham, and a minstrel company at the town hall, not to mention the weekly YMCA meeting.

The new volume of the Orient beginning with the spring term was under the managing editorship of George B. Chandler '90 — one of that small group of hardy Chapel spire climbers. Of the editorial board two members are still attending Bowdoin Commencements — Dr. Thomas Burr and Dr. Charles Lincoln, both of the Class of 1891.

In debating Bowdoin beat Vermont on the question of granting subsidies to ships engaged in foreign trade. Stahl, Brewster, and Atwood were the Bowdoin team. According to the Orient, a debate with Wesleyan was scheduled for Friday, March 19, but that was the date of the last issue of the Orient for the term. The new board of editors did not mention the debate in their first issue about a month later. It has been unfortunately characteristic of the Orient that though a reader in later years may rely in fair safety on the accuracy of what is reported, he finds many gaps and omissions.

The series of musical recitals continued, with Professor Hutchins, Miss Winchell, and Miss Stetson as performers. The college teas were continued, three being given, two in conjunction with the dancing Assemblies given by the junior class. Cocktail parties and weekend house parties were yet to develop.

There were 420 students enrolled, 348 of whom were in the undergraduate department, with 57 instructors. There was, therefore, approximately one teacher to every seven and one-half students. The most notable addition was a course in Italian given by Professor Brown in alternation with the course in Spanish.

An outdoor hockey rink functioned intermittently during the winter, and it was only occasionally necessary for the freshmen to shovel it off. A hockey schedule of four games was arranged, and it was hoped that this would be the beginning of regular hockey at Bowdoin. Outdoor rinks made the sport uncertain and hazardous, but the growing popularity of the game was eventually to result in a hockey rink and standardized contests. Skating on the river was good for several weeks. Among those participating was President Hyde, who did not lose any of his dignity even while skating. He set a skating precedent which President Coles now delights to follow in the Arena.

The issue of the Orient for January 22, 1909, carried interesting reminiscences by the Reverend E. N. Packard '62. The nephew of the famous Professor A. S. Packard 1816 and the son of Charles Packard 1817, he had a lifelong connection with Brunswick and the College. He vividly remembered the obsequies following the death of Professor Parker Cleaveland in October, 1858.

The system of sabbatical years was just getting underway. The energetic Professor William T. Foster was granted one for the coming year.

At the YMCA meeting on January 14 Harold Burton '09 gave an interesting account of his experiences on a New York fresh-air farm.

Two of Bowdoin's most distinguished Civil War participants spoke at the New York alumni dinner — General O. O. Howard '50 and General Thomas H. Hubbard '57. The third, General J. L. Chamberlain '52, was unable to be present.

A successful college smoker was held on February 8. No program was announced, but a concert was given by the college band, the mandolin club, and the glee club. A new song, "The College for Me," written by Professor Robinson, was sung. Crane '12 gave a reading which was enthusiastically received, and the crowd insisted on three encores.

Bowdoin beat Tufts in the relay race at the BAA meet.

The Class of '68 prize speaking was won by Stahl. His subject: "The Effect of Italy on the Germanic Temperament." The other speakers were Brewster, Atwood, Cushing, Burton, and Goodspeed. Subsequently Stahl was awarded the Henry Wadsworth Longfellow fellowship for the next collegiate year.

Seward J. Marsh was elected squad leader of the freshman class.

Commemorating exercises were held in Memorial Hall on the 100th anniversary of Lincoln's birth. Professor Allen Johnson presided and Professor Mitchell gave the address — composed, phrased, and delivered as only "Mitch" could. Professor Sills read an original poem and the glee club sang "We Are Coming, Father Abraham."

The annual tour of the musical clubs with concerts in Maine, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts received favorable newspaper comment, particularly the work of the mandolin club and the readings by Stone, who "proved to be a find" and was called back for encores live or six times on each occasion.

The dramatic club had a schedule of eight Maine towns and cities for its current play, "A Regiment of Two."

A conference of the Christian associations of the colleges of Maine was held at Bowdoin March 12 to 14. The invitation was extended by President Hyde for the College and by L. F. Timberlake '09, president, and Roderick Scott, secretary, for the Christian Association.

On March 22 Professor Arlo Bates '76 of the department of English at M.I.T. and in his own right a distinguished writer, spoke on "The Art of Thinking."

The Orient for March 12, 1909, carried an architect's sketch and plans for the new gymnasium which the undergraduates were eager to have. The campaign was started, and the new alumni gymnasium and athletic building were erected in 1912. The gymnasium was paid for by alumni and students; the athletic building was presented by John Hyde of Bath in memory of T. W. Hyde 1861.

This was one of the years when fencing was a successful sport at Bowdoin.

The new volume of the Orient beginning with the spring term was under the editorship of W. E. Atwood '10 as editor-in-chief, L. McFarland '11 as managing editor, and R. D. Morss '10 as business manager.

One of the fraternities moved its eating place temporarily to the Tontine Hotel. Over the years prior to the time when chapter houses succeeded private boarding houses as eating places, most of the fraternities had longtime arrangements with the same hostesses and usually at the same location. Of the five senior fraternities, for many years the Alpha Deltas ate at Mrs. Kaler's on Pleasant Street — if recollection is correct — the Psi U's at "Fan" Pennell's, next to their chapter house, the Theta Deltas at Mrs. Rogers' on Page Street, the Zetas at the Getchell House on Bath Street, and the Dekes at Mrs. Hill's on Noble Street.

For the second time in the history of the College a woman addressed the Sunday chapel service. Miss Frances Yeoman of Fisk University told about the work of that co-educational colored school.

The third annual forum of modern religious thought continued the successful pattern of the two previous conferences, beginning with an address by Bishop Booth of Vermont and continuing with conferences at the various fraternity houses and the Union in which every fraternity and non-fraternity group was represented.

New chaperonage codes for the fraternity houses were being drawn up. Dean Nixon spoke pungently in chapel on the responsibility of student council and fraternity presidents adequately to live up to the confidence vested in them by the college authorities.

Austin H. MacCormick '15, recent alumni secretary, was made commissioner of correction of New York by Mayor LaGuardia. His nephew, Donald P. MacCormick '33, was named Maine finalist in the competition for four New England Rhodes scholarships, but the awards went to two seniors from Yale and one each from Dartmouth and Harvard.

Clinton Osborne '36 was awarded All-American honors in the official intercollegiate swimming guide. During the winter Henry Franklin '36, who had transferred to Bowdoin after three years at Worcester Tech, established five new college records in his first three weeks at Bowdoin and became the cornerstone of the Bowdoin JV's. The swimming squad drubbed Boston University by the largest score in the history of the Bowdoin team. By way of anticlimax the JV's, with Franklin as a member (ineligible for the varsity under the one-year rule), trounced the varsity 42-35 in an end-of-the-season meet. The Orient recommended that swimming be made a major sport because of the distinguished record of some of the members of the teams during the season, but the paper characterized the varsity season as "disastrous" because the victory against B. U. was the only win against college opposition. Sixth place was taken in the New England Intercollegiates, but the individual prowess of Captain Bob Foster on the varsity team and Franklin of the JV's brightened the record. The JV's lost only one contest during the season.

The annual bird lecture, by William L. Finley, naturalist, took as its subject "The Arctic Regions," illustrated with motion pictures.

Fearnside '34 and Tipping '35 won first prize and Parker '35 and Redmond '34 second in the annual Bradbury Prize debate. Both pairs took the affirmative against negative speakers on the proposition of increasing the powers of the president of the United States. This was also the subject of the varsity debates during the winter. The team lost to Clark University, Pembroke College, Boston University, and Union College but won twice from New Hampshire and, in the final debate of the season, from Boston College.

The hockey team was frustrated much of the season by poor ice conditions. After several early defeats the team, by victories over Colby and Bates, held for a time the leadership in the State Series. An editorial in the Orient quoted approvingly Dean Nixon's statement that hockey without a covered rink is impracticable at Bowdoin.

The track team dominated the New England Athletic Union championship meet at Boston led by Captain Charles Allen (now the new College Treasurer) and Phil Good. The team placed in all but two events and won two firsts, three seconds, and a third. Subsequently the Bowdoin team won the University Club Class B title at the Boston Garden for the third consecutive year although its star high jumper was out of the competition because of an injury and there was no broad jump contest, which Bowdoin men would have easily won. The college community was proud to learn that Charles F. Stanwood '32, former track team captain, captured first place in three events in leading Oxford to a 7 to 4 victory over Cambridge. Howie Niblock broke the intercollegiate shot put record at Madison Square Garden by 14 inches.

A. P. Putnam was chosen president of the sophomore class, P. G. Good vice-president, and A. S. Mills secretary-treasurer.

The juniors elected S. A. Sargent president, M. L. Hughes vice-president, J. S. Boyd secretary-treasurer, and Edward Baravalle popular man. Public announcement was made of the annual election of popular man by the junior class as well as the results of fraternity elections, replacing the earlier and long-time policy of imposed secrecy.

The seniors chose C. W. Allen for president, C. A. Ackerman for vice-president, and G. E. Gillett for secretary-treasurer.

Stanley Casson, visiting professor on the Tallman Foundation, gave a series of lectures on recent archaeological findings.

Worn down by the worries of the depression years, President Sills was obliged to take a month's rest on a Mediterranean cruise during March.

James E. Bassett '34 won the first Masque and Gown one-act play contest with "This Side Insanity." Thomas M. S. Spencer '37 was second. The other two contenders were Paul Welsh '37 and Arthur M. Stratton '35.

A special exhibit commemorating the discovery of the North Pole in 1909 by Robert E. Peary '77 was shown.

Professor Rhys Carpenter of Bryn Mawr spoke at the Union on "The Origin of Ancient Alphabets."

Gordon Gillett won the '68 prize speaking, discussing the contribution of Christianity to the social order. The other speakers were Alexander P. Clark, M. Chandler Redman, W. Ward Fearnside, Clay Lewis, and Charles F. Kahill.

H., Barton, Vt., Plainfield, Vt., Newcastle, and Norridgewock. In 1916 he became superintendent of schools in Norridgewock and served in that capacity until 1925, when he was named head of the State School for Boys. He retired to Waldoboro in 1931 and four years later, in 1935, received a bachelor of divinity degree from Bangor Theological Seminary.

A Mason, he is survived by two sons, Charles W. of Wakefield and Harold M. of Norwalk, Conn.; an adopted daughter, Mrs. Henry L. Turner of Portland; twelve grandchildren, thirty-two great-grandchildren; and fifteen great-great-grandchildren.

1902 IRVING ELLIS MABRY, M.D., one of the founders of the Bridgton Hospital, the predecessor to the Northern Cumberland Memorial Hospital, died there on March 4, 1959. Born in East Hiram on April 28, 1878, he was the son of Dr. Irving Mabry of the Maine Medical School Class of 1880. He prepared at Thornton Academy and following his graduation from Bowdoin taught school for three years before entering the Maine Medical School, from which he received his M.D. degree in 1909. He interned in Salem, Mass., and New York City and set up practice in Bridgton in 1912. There he remained, with the exception of service during World War I with the Army Medical Corps, until his death. He was honored by his friends and patients in July of 1952, when he was presented a medal for good citizenship, a plaque for outstanding service to the community, a gold watch, and another plaque from the people of the towns of Denmark, Hiram, and Brownfield. A member of the American Legion and a Mason, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Hattie Rand Mabry; two daughters, Mrs. Ellen Morris and Mrs. Betty Foster; a son, Burton; a grandson, and a granddaughter. His fraternity was Theta Delta Chi.

1902 RALPH BUSHNELL STONE, for thirty years registrar at Purdue University, where he also taught mathematics for forty years, died on February 27, 1959, in West Lafayette, Ind. Born on June 4, 1882, in Otter River, Mass., he prepared at Templeton (Mass.) High School and at the Stone School in Boston. Following his graduation from Bowdoin summa cum laude, he studied for three years at Harvard, receiving a master of arts degree in 1904, and continued his graduate work at the University of Turin in Italy and at the University of Munich in Germany until 1907. At that time he was appointed instructor in mathematics and physics at Bowdoin, where he remained until 1911. After another year in graduate study at Harvard he joined the Purdue faculty in 1912 and remained there until his retirement in 1952. He served as registrar at Purdue from 1918 until 1947 and was also secretary of the faculty for many years. A member of the Mathematical Association of America and the Indiana Academy of Science, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ethel Webb Stone, whom he married in Brunswick on June 21, 1913, and a son, Franklin W. of Indianapolis, Ind. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Alpha Delta Phi.

1905 RAYMOND THOMAS WARREN, retired New England Telephone and Telegraph Company employee, died in Portland on February 18, 1959. Born on July 27, 1881, in Castine, he prepared at Kents Hill Seminary and following his graduation worked for three years with the Guaranty Trust Company in New York. In 1911 he joined the plant department of New England Tel and Tel and retired in 1944. He and Mrs. Warren lived in Portland during the winter and spent summers in South Waterford. A 32nd degree Mason and a past master of Ancient Land Mark Lodge, AF & AM, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Alice Hamlin Warren, whom he married in South Waterford on November 26, 1914, and a cousin. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1905 STANLEY WILLIAMS, a retired executive of the International Banking Corporation and the National City Bank of New York, died in Palo Alto, Calif., on March 20, 1959. investment business in Boston before moving to Portland, where he was president of Timberlake & Company until about ten years ago. When the Casco Bank and Trust Company was organized in 1933, he became its first executive vice president. He was named president in 1943 and was elected board chairman in 1955.

A past president of the Maine Bankers Association, he was past treasurer of the Maine State Chamber of Commerce, a director of the Portland YMCA, a 32nd degree Mason, and a member of the Portland Club and the Cumberland Club. He was also a director of Sanders Engineering Company and Forster Manufacturing Company in Farmington. During World War I he served as a first lieutenant in the Army Ordnance Department.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Jessie Chapman Timberlake, whom he married in Lovell on February 2, 1911; three daughters, Mrs. Miles E. Dodge of Glendale, Calif., Mrs. Reynolds E. Moulton of Cape Elizabeth, and Mrs. Morgan R. Lee of Portland; a sister, Mrs. Bay E. Estes of Portland; and nine grandchildren. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1911 LAWRENCE PRATT PARKMAN, who was for many years associated with S. D. Warren Paper Company in Cumberland Mills, died on February 25, 1959, in Falmouth Foreside. Born on December 27, 1888, in Portland, he prepared at Portland High School. He joined S. D. Warren immediately upon his graduation in 1911 and served for some years as superintendent there before his retirement. He was elected first vice chairman of the Northeastern Division of the American Pulp and Paper Mill Superintendents Association in 1932. On November 19, 1913, he was married to Miss Helen Cromwell Sargent of Falmouth Foreside, and they had one daughter, Mrs. Anna Parkman Sellers. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

1917 JERRY DEMPSEY GLIDDEN, Aroostook County potato grower and long a champion of Maine minerals development, died suddenly on March 28, 1959, in Westbrook, where he was visiting his daughter. Born on January 13, 1896, in Presque Isle, he prepared at the local high school and following his graduation from Bowdoin served for 18 months in the Army as a first sergeant. He taught Latin and algebra at Presque Isle High School for a year and then became a field inspector in the potato industry for the U.S. Department of Agriculture. In 1920 he entered the potato industry as a grower. His farm had recently been turned over entirely to seed potato growing. He was primarily responsible for the discovery of lime in a sufficient amount for industrial realization in Aroostook County. Together with several other businessmen he developed a plant for the production of lime and crushed stone products.

Mr. Glidden was a member of the Maine Development Commission for three years. He was largely responsible for the establishment of a sub-division of geology in the Maine Department of Economic Development and served as chairman of its minerals committee. He was a member of the American Legion and was active in civil defense in Aroostook County during World War II. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Una Scott Glidden, whom he married in Presque Isle on February 6, 1918; a son, Philip E. '51; a daughter, Mrs. Margaret G. Geraghty of Westbrook; two brothers, Winfield of Presque Isle and Walter of Avoca, N. Y.; two half-brothers and two half-sisters; and four grandchildren. His fraternity was Delta Upsilon.

Following his graduation in 1919 he preached in Baptist, Congregational, and Methodist churches in West Bangor, West Waldoboro, Dutch Neck, Litchfield, Harpswell, Dennysville, Seal Harbor, Bradford, and Hudson, specializing in rural churches. More recently he was engaged in social service work for a religious organization.

1920 RALPH EMERSON EUSTIS died in Lakeland, Fla., on March 4, 1959. Born on June 25, 1898, in Strong, he prepared at the local high school and attended Bowdoin for a year and a half. He worked with the Goodyear Rubber Company in Ohio and later in Fitchburg, Mass., and Portland before becoming a rural mail carrier in the Strong area, a position he held for thirty-four years, until his death. An honorary member of Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity at the University of Maine, he was one of the five original trustees of the Strong School District. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Marion Richardson Eustis, whom he married in Portland on January 30, 1921; a daughter, Mrs. Marjorie Smith of Livermore Falls; a son, Richard E. of Orono; two grandchildren; and a brother, Lawrence of Strong.

1920 ALAN ROBERTSON MCKINLEY, vicar of the Church of Our Saviour in Okeechobee, Fla., died on January 30, 1959. Born Allan William Constantine on July 11, 1891, in Durban, Natal, South Africa, he prepared at St. David's House in Greytown, Natal. He was licensed to preach in Durban as a local preacher in 1908 and continued to preach in Africa until 1913, when he entered Bangor Theological Seminary. Following pastorates at New Harbor and Richmond, he entered Bowdoin as a special student and received his degree in 1920. He then returned to South Africa, where he preached in Paarl and also studied at the University of Stellenbosch, receiving a master of science degree in 1923. He returned to the United States in 1925 and accepted a pastorate in Kennebunk. From 1930 to 1942 he was in Warsaw, N. Y., at first as a Congregational minister and later as a supervisor for Aetna Life Insurance Company. In 1945 he was appointed vicar of St. George's Episcopal Church in Sanford and in recent years had served churches in Florida. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Florence Wells McKinley, whom he married in Boston on June 4, 1914; two sons, Allan '50 and Gordon; and two daughters, Muriel and Ruth. He was a member of Sigma Nu fraternity.

1921 PHILIP STANWOOD STETSON, one of five Brunswick brothers to attend Bowdoin, died at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., on February 2, 1959. Born in Brunswick on February 7, 1899, he prepared at Brunswick High School and following his graduation from Bowdoin in 1921 entered the investment business in New York City. He was a veteran of World War I. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Marion Jameson Stetson, whom he married in 1942; two sisters, Mrs. Evelyn S. Brown of Newport Beach, Calif., and Mrs. Lucy S. Merrifield of Waterville; and two brothers, Alvah B. '15 and Robert S. '18. His fraternity was Kappa Sigma.

1922 CLARENCE PENNINGTON YERXA died in Houlton on January 28, 1959, at the age of 58. Born there on May 16, 1900, he prepared at the local high school and following his graduation from Bowdoin in 1922 returned to Houlton, where he continued to live for the rest of his life. He engaged in both agriculture and business. A member of the Houlton Grange, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Alta Sherwood Yerxa; two sons, Joseph and Richard; a brother, George of Houlton; and two sisters, Mrs. Ruth Riley of Newington, Conn., and Mrs. Helen Kravigny of Mount Vernon, N. Y. His fraternity was Zeta Psi.

1925 FREDERICK LYMAN BOSWORTH, manager of the Casco Music System in Cambridge, Mass., died in Waltham, Mass., on February 27, 1959. Born on January 27, 1903, in East Acton, Mass., he prepared at the Huntington School in Boston and attended Bowdoin for two years. He received a bachelor of science degree from Tufts in 1928, a master of education degree from Boston University in 1934, and a master of public relations degree from B.U. in 1950. A Navy veteran of World War II, he was sports editor of the Medford (Mass.) Mercury from 1928 to 1937. For several years he was a director of physical education in Jewett City, Conn., in Boston, and in Hamilton, Mass. He later worked for Babson's Reports, Inc., and the Beverly (Mass.) Evening Times and also served as commercial manager for Radio Station WCRB in Waltham. A member of the American Legion, the Publicity Club of Boston, the Advertising Club of Boston, and the Broadcast Executives Club of Boston, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Phyllis Lynch Bosworth, and a sister, Miss Beatrice Bosworth of Brockton, Mass. His fraternity was Alpha Delta Phi.

Cap'n Mac in the ice

Bowdoin Day At Mystic

JUNE 27TH WILL BE BOWDOIN DAY at Mystic, Conn. On that day Admiral Donald B. MacMillan '98 will sail his auxiliary schooner Bowdoin to Mystic Seaport, where she will be enshrined at the Mystic Marine Museum.

The 88-foot Bowdoin will tie up permanently alongside other ships that have made heroic maritime history. Near by will be the whaler Charles W. Morgan, which caught more whales than any other similar ship; the schooner Australia, believed by some historians to have been captured from the British in the attack on Baltimore in 1814; the training and adventure ship Joseph Conrad; and the Chinese junk, Mon Lei, which crossed the Pacific in 1942 in 86 days.

The Bowdoin is the only schooner in the country which was especially designed and built for Arctic work. Because of her many miles of Arctic travel (26 expeditions and more than 300,000 miles) and because of her many narrow escapes from complete destruction, she is probably the most famous schooner in the world today.

During Admiral MacMillan's Crocker Land expedition in North Greenland from 1913 to 1917, he made plans for further exploration. Sitting in an igloo at the top of the world (marooned there for four years with two years' food supply) waiting for a rescue ship strong enough to penetrate the ice field of Melville Bay — two had made the attempt and failed — he planned a schooner to carry on his work in the uncharted, ice-jammed waters of the Far North.

THE BOWDOIN is 60 tons gross, 88 feet long, and 21 feet wide, so small she can be jammed into a niche in the rocks when ice comes piling down on her. She is a two-masted auxiliary schooner, doubleplanked and double framed with native white oak from Maine, and sheathed against ice with a five-foot belt one and one-half inches thick of Australian "iron" wood, also known as greenheart, the toughest wood known and so heavy it will not float.

She is short-rigged for heavy weather in Baffin Bay, with no topmast or bowsprit. This eliminates the danger of a man's being washed overboard or falling from aloft in attempting to furl sail.

The Bowdoin has an exceptionally large rudder to enable her to turn easily and quickly when working through leads. The propeller is deep under the water to avoid damage when the engine is reversed. Originally she had two watertight bulkheads so that, if injured at bow or stern, she would still float. At the present time there is an entrance from the forecabin into the main hold.

Her bow is spoon-shaped, so that if unable to push through a broken field of ice, she can rise up on a pan and crush it under her forefoot. Her dead rise is such that when nipped by ice she can escape from its clutches by rising bodily up out of it. On her bow, firmly bolted to the hull, is a nose piece of steel plate weighing 1800 pounds, designed to protect the hull against damage when it comes in contact with heavy ice and also to aid in splitting one-year-old ice "pans."

To give her stability in heavy weather, 21 tons of mixed cement and boiler punchings are molded into her hull — to give her hull weight, strength, and rigidity when breaking through ice floes, especially in Melville Bay, where 21 ships were crushed in one day. The Bowdoin has crossed this bay repeatedly in her many years of Arctic work. On two occasions, because of her construction and her sharp bilges, she has been lifted by ice pressure almost completely out of water and rolled over on her side.

Her shrouds and stays are steel; her masts and booms are of Oregon pine. There are two large wrecking pumps leading well amidships in case of serious leakage caused by ice pressure. Two steel fuel tanks, holding a total of 2200 gallons of fuel oil, are molded into her bilges.

FOR POWER the Bowdoin has a 100 horsepower full diesel Cummins engine, burning five gallons per hour. She carries two anchors, each weighing 600 pounds, and some 90 fathoms of studlink chain. Formerly of 32 volt, she is now equipped for 110, which furnishes power for all lights on board and also for the electric windlass and refrigeration. For cooking she is equipped with an oil burning, six-hold Shipmate stove.

She sleeps thirteen, two in the after cabin, four in the main, and seven in the forecabin.

She is good under both power and sail, going at seven and one-half knots under engine and at times ten under sail.

Designed by William H. Hand of New Bedford, Mass., and built at East Boothbay during the winter of 1920-21 by Hodgdon Brothers, the Bowdoin was launched in March of 1921. Within two months she headed north on her first trip, with the unexplored west coast of Baffin Island as her objective point. She was the first ship to circumnavigate Foxe Basin, going as far north as the entrance to Fury and Hecla Strait, following on her return the east coast, and wintering at what is now known as "Schooner Harbor," inside of the Trinity Islands.

This expedition was sponsored by the Carnegie Institution of Washington to do work in atmospheric electricity and terrestrial magnetism, and for 11 months the ship was frozen in — that is, buried in snow and ice to keep her warm and to protect her from the extremely cold air and cold winds. Three snow houses were built on top of her, one for ventilation and the others for entrance into the forecabin and the after cabin.

All told, the Bowdoin has made 26 trips into northern waters, visiting in the course of 300,000 miles, Labrador, Hudson Bay, Foxe Basin, Baffin Island, Iceland, the east and west coasts of Greenland, North Greenland, and Ellesmere Island.

The Bowdoin's wireless equipment, supplied by Zenith Radio Corporation, enabled her to be the first ship in the world to send and receive messages in the Arctic. This was accomplished in 1923-24, when she was frozen in the ice for 11 months at Refuge Harbor, North Greenland, 78° 25' North Latitude. The first ship to send and receive messages to practically all parts of the world, even to New Zealand, 11,000 miles away, she is now equipped with a ship-to-shore telephone, which in 1941 contacted Boston from 56° North Latitude.

THIS IS THE BOWDOIN. The gift to Mystic Seaport from the MacMillans, numerous alumni, and friends from all over the country, she will be outfitted just as if she were ready to leave on another Arctic voyage, with blankets on the bunks and a cribbage board on the cabin table. Each year some 200,000 people are expected to go aboard her.

Cap'n Mac's many friends and admirers among Bowdoin alumni may share in this project to preserve for posterity the grand saga of his lifetime of Arctic exploration. Anyone desiring to share may send his contribution directly to the Marine Historical Association, Inc., Mystic, Conn., marking his gift for the "Schooner Bowdoin Fund."

This is the ship, and this will be her final resting place. The man is too well known to Bowdoin men for biographical information here. Pictured on the facing page are the man and the ship — as they will always be remembered. This is how they will look as Cap'n Mac sails his beloved Bowdoin to Mystic Seaport on Saturday, June 27.

Rudy Thayer The Man

Professor Albert R. Thayer '22 received his just deserts on Monday evening, May 18. Lured to the Moulton Union under the pretext that he was to inspect a birthday cake which had been prepared for Mrs. Donovan D. Lancaster, he was taken completely by surprise to find a group of undergraduates and faculty and staff members ready to greet him with a prolonged round of applause.

The applause was merely the beginning of the evening's program. Following a roast beef banquet fit for a debater, master of ceremonies Peter S. Smith '60 of Durham, N. H., and Alfred E. Schretter '59 of Florham Park, N. J., both paid eloquent tribute to their debating coach, as did Norman T. London, Instructor in Speech, and President Coles. Debaters are known for their ability to speak well, and Messrs. Smith and Schretter, one of the top teams in New England, outdid themselves.

And well they might have, for Rudy Thayer has done an outstanding job since joining the Bowdoin faculty permanently in 1939 (he had served for a year as an instructor back in 1924-25). But this year things really "jelled" for him. Bowdoin's 15-man squad won 73 out of 98 contests. They won first place in three important tournaments and tied for first in two others.

In addition, during the spring recess four debaters took part in exhibition debates before 3500 students in high schools in Hartford and New Canaan, Conn., and in Ridgewood, Maplewood, and Summit, N. J. The tour culminated in a successful exhibition debate before the military personnel of the United States Army Pictorial Center at Long Island City, N. Y.

With several fine freshman prospects and with a strong group of upperclassmen returning, Professor Thayer expects to continue to turn out excellent debating teams—men who can think on their feet in the middle of a contest, not men who are mechanical debaters and must depend upon sound preparation alone. The combination of sound preparation and sound thinking in competition has produced some outstanding Thayer debaters over the past 20 years, and this year's crop was perhaps the best of all.

By way of human interest—Herbert Ross Brown (Bowdoin's incomparable "Herbie") was captain of one of Rudy Thayer's first debating teams at Lafayette College. This team met a Bowdoin team captained by Athern P. Daggett '25, who for many years has taught government at Bowdoin.

Before joining the faculty in 1939 Professor Thayer taught for 15 years in secondary schools. He did his graduate work in the field of speech correction and received training in five public and two hospital clinics. He spent a sabbatical leave four years ago in study at the Institute of Logopedics in Wichita, Kan. He is a former past president of the New England Speech Association and the author of a recent study on the status of speech in 150 small colleges.

And, shining above all this factual material, impressive as it is, is Rudy Thayer the man. This is what was stressed at the testimonial banquet on May 18, and this is what his students will always remember—the deep personal interest which he takes in them and the hundreds of hours he spends every year on individual instruction.

THE COVER

This photograph of the campus, taken sometime in the last decade of the nineteenth century, presents a clear picture of the campus as it looked nearly seventy years ago. It was taken from the spot where the Class of 1875 Gateway now stands, with the camera pointed toward the Chapel along what is now the Class of 1895 Path. Actually the Class of 1875 Gateway was constructed in 1910 and the Class of 1895 Path in 1945.

Recent alumni will be surprised at the changes which seventy years have wrought. Older alumni who have not returned to the campus for many years will find that the cover scene portrays part of the campus very much as they remember it from their undergraduate days.

At, Over, And Under The Pole

ADMIRAL ROBERT E. PEARY '77, in making his way to the North Pole 50 years ago, "revolutionized mankind's geographical concepts and aims," William R. Anderson, commanding officer of the U.S.S. Nautilus, told a Bowdoin audience on May 7 as he delivered the third and final talk in a special lecture series on the Arctic.

The first two speakers in the series were Peary's grandson, Navy Commander Edward Peary Stafford, who spoke on aviation in the Arctic, and his daughter, Mrs. Edward Stafford of Brunswick, whose subject was "Peary's Trip to the Pole."

Commander Anderson, author of the current best seller Nautilus 90 North, is a quiet-spoken, youthful-appearing Southerner from Bakersville, Tenn., who was graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1942. During World War II he took part in 11 submarine war patrols as an officer aboard the Tarpon, the Narwhal, and the Trutta. During the Korean action he commanded the Wahoo, and in 1957 became commanding officer of the Nautilus.

"There is a revolution going on today in the world of inner space," according to Commander Anderson. "This revolution is taking place in the Arctic and every other ocean, not only through nuclear submarines but also through every other means by which man is moving into the ocean's depths. I firmly believe that within this medium is contained much of the means by which we can gain lasting world peace and the solution to man's problems."

True achievement, he continued, "is seldom possible without the work of those who have gone before. In this respect today's nuclear submarine service and indeed our entire Navy owe a special debt of gratitude to Admiral Peary, for it was he who first confirmed the basic dimensions of the great Arctic basin, who first confirmed that the water at the North Pole is thousands of feet deep, that the ice throughout the basin remains fairly uniform and predictable and not hundreds of feet deep as had been popularly assumed. These and other findings of Admiral Peary are a basic ingredient of today's polar submarine operations."

Commander Anderson described the trip of the nuclear-powered Nautilus under the North Pole last August 3rd. The temperature in the submarine averaged 72 degrees and the humidity was 50%, giving conditions of "shirtsleeve comfort throughout the voyage."

"The fabulous performance of a new inertial navigation system," he said, "enabled us always to know our position within very precise limits, without any need for observations of the stars or for the reception of radio-type navigation signals. Upward-beamed sonar drew out a precise picture of the ice overhead, telling us its exact thickness and shape. Television and periscopes gave us a fascinating view of the ice passing overhead."

Commander Anderson paid tribute to Peary in these words: "I know of no quality in man that is quite so much to be admired as determination, and I know of no man who has shown quite so much of this quality as Bowdoin's most illustrious alumnus, Admiral Robert E. Peary. The man who lived the motto 'I will find a way or make one' found and made his way to the North Pole and in so doing revolutionized mankind's geographical concepts and aims."

COMMANDER STAFFORD, in the first talk of the series on April 17, stated that "aviation has made for itself an indispensable place today in the Polar areas." His grandfather, he said, had used much these same words in predicting 50 years ago, shortly after he reached the Pole on foot, that aviation would become indispensable.

Commander William R. Anderson, U.S.N.

Aviation today, according to Commander Stafford, provides supplies all-year round to the stations on the radar warning system in the Far North which are inaccessible most of the year except by air. In addition, aviation has made charting and surveying in the Polar areas much more rapid and accurate. Planes flying ice reconnaissance missions help guide supply ships to military bases by tracing out the best routes to follow.

He outlined the history of aviation in the Arctic, beginning with a balloon trip undertaken by a Swede named André, who left Spitzbergen in 1897 and planned to go over the Pole. He and his party got about 325 miles before crashing, and it was not until 33 years later that their bodies were found. Ten years later, in 1907, a journalist named Walter Wellman tried the same thing in a dirigible, but after going 50 miles he was blown back to Spitzbergen, where he made a crash landing.

In 1925 Roald Amundsen and Lincoln Ellsworth got to within 137 miles of the Pole in two seaplanes from Spitzbergen. In that same year Richard E. Byrd flew reconnaissance flights from Greenland, and in 1926 he and Floyd Bennett flew from Spitzbergen directly to the Pole and back in just under 16 hours. They had perfect weather and encountered practically no problems.

Two days later Amundsen and Ellsworth, in a lighter-than-air craft, also flew over the Pole. They continued on to Alaska and after 70 hours of continuous flying landed 90 miles northeast of Nome.

Commander Stafford also outlined some of the dangers of aviation in the Arctic. They include icing, fog, magnetic storms, which cancel out communications, the difficulties of search and rescue operations, winds which often reach 100 miles an hour or more, the unreliability of weather data and charts, the small number of airfields, and static electricity discharges, which sometimes punch holes in the fuselage of a plane.

Currently assigned as one of two naval liaison officers to the United States Senate, Commander Stafford is also working on a book about the World War II aircraft carrier Enterprise for a New York publishing company. A native of Portland, he served during World War II as commanding officer of a subchaser and as executive officer of a destroyer escort. He received his wings as a Navy aviator in 1950 and since that time has been engaged variously in hurricane hunting in the Caribbean, anti-submarine exercises in the Atlantic, patrols out of Iceland and Newfoundland, and ice reconnaissance from Thule, Greenland, as well as radar patrols across the North Atlantic.

Two years ago he also found time to win $64,000 on a television quiz program.

MRS. STAFFORD, speaking on May 6, the 103rd anniversary of her father's birth, told how the discovery of the Pole was "the crown and glory" of his entire career. His wife and children were at their summer home on Eagle Island in Casco Bay when they received the first news of his reaching the Pole. The news was brought to them by the late Thomas H. Riley jr. '03, then an Associated Press representative in Brunswick, who hired a boat to take him out to Eagle Island.

The greatest tribute ever paid Peary was that of the Eskimos in 1932, when Mrs. Stafford headed an expedition to Cape York in Greenland to erect a 60-foot monument and plaque in his memory. They said that they always spoke of him as "great Peary of the iron will. He never asked an Eskimo or any other person to do anything he wouldn't do himself, and he never failed to keep a promise."

Mrs. Stafford herself was born in Greenland at 77 degrees 44 minutes North latitude, within the Arctic Circle. The author of five books on the Arctic, she received an honorary master of arts degree at Bowdoin in 1949. She has served as President of the International Society of Woman Geographers and in 1954 received the Henry G. Bryant Gold Medal of the Geographical Society of Philadelphia for "distinguished service to geography."

This was the formal observance of the 50th anniversary of Peary's discovery of the North Pole on April 6, 1909. Memories of what was said and of the people who described the Arctic in all its phases — under the ice cap, on the ice, and in the air — will remain with all who were fortunate enough to be present in Pickard Theater those three spring evenings.

An Invitation To The Moulton Union

By Donovan D. Lancaster '27

IT HAS BEEN SAID that the Moulton Union reflects the great purposes of the College. It is a focal point of democratic student activity, to be sure. Even more, it is a democratic place and a cosmopolitan one. Race, color, social status, and creed are no restriction here. The Union provides opportunities for forming friendships. There is the air of the good life about the place — activity and leisure, bustle and quiet, rooms in which to read and listen to great music; good pictures, good talk, and games. This is the Union.

Alumni and their families, from near and far, are always welcome. Here one can meet other members of the Bowdoin family. An alumnus often runs across an old Bowdoin friend or makes a new one.

The Union is also a service institution, for alumni as well as for undergraduates. During the college year the dining room is open from early morning until midnight, for a meal, a snack, or just a cup of coffee. The bookstore, which is on the lower floor, is open from 9 to 5 Monday through Saturday. It offers much of special interest to alumni, particularly Bowdoin items for personal use and wedding, birthday, and Christmas presents. The famous Bowdoin Wedgwood china and Bowdoin glassware are sold nowhere else. In addition, we have articles of clothing (all with the Bowdoin seal) for babies, children, and teenagers. We sell Bowdoin playing cards, rings, and mugs. Only this last year an attractive new song book containing the words and music for a large number of Bowdoin and fraternity songs was added. A postal card of inquiry will bring immediate detailed information. The Union's mail order business to alumni is increasing each year.

For the alumnus who comes back to Bowdoin and revisits familiar scenes, perhaps with his wife, the Union offers guest rooms at a moderate price. This will be his home on campus, the headquarters from which he may call on old friends, go to chapel, take in a game, revisit the Library, or have dinner with the boys in the fraternity house.

During the coming summer the Union is to be open for the National Science Foundation Institute sessions from June 29 to August 7. The bookstore will do business from 11 until 2 Monday through Friday.

The Director of the Union, now finishing his 30th year in this capacity, has his office on the second floor. As they say up here in Maine, the latch string is always out. He can go one better and say that the door is always open. He enjoys welcoming old and new friends to the College.

Commencement Notes

As the ALUMNUS goes to press, there are a few last-minute notes on the 154th Commencement.

Professor Louis O. Coxe will deliver the 9:30 a.m. Alumni Institute Lecture on "American Literature Since World War II" on Friday, June 12, in Smith Auditorium. At 2:00 that afternoon, also in Smith Auditorium, Professor Reinhard L. Korgen will speak on "A Liberal Arts College and Arctic Exploration — a Paradox." Admission is free, and all alumni, seniors, wives, parents, and other guests are cordially invited to attend.

Henry IV, Part I is the Commencement Play. It will be presented at the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall on Friday, June 12, at 8:45 p.m. All seats will be reserved, with tickets priced at $2.00 each.

For the second year in a row, Nichols of Exeter, N. H., will cater a delicious chicken barbecue luncheon (tuna salad alternate) on Friday, June 12. The Alumni Association meets in the Arena, and the Society of Bowdoin Women will gather in the Sargent Gymnasium. Tickets this year are $1.75 each. (The Society of Bowdoin Women will have its business session at 10 a.m. in Gibson Hall of Music.)

The Class of 1934 will hold the traditional Twenty-fifth Reunion Reception at Pickard Field House for faculty, staff, and friends on Thursday afternoon, June 11, from two until five. The somewhat early hour will allow members of the class to adjourn to the Poland Spring House thereafter for a stag dinner.

The Alumni Council and the Directors of the Alumni Fund will hold their regular annual meetings on Friday morning, June 12. The Fund Directors will meet at nine o'clock in Room 108, Sills Hall, and the Alumni Council will meet in Room 107, Sills Hall, at ten-thirty.

As was noted in the April ALUMNUS, all the five-year classes, from 1909 through 1954, are holding regular reunions, and some of the off-year classes are also planning get-togethers. Three consecutive post-war classes will hold reunions when 1949 has its Tenth, with headquarters in 3 South Winthrop, 1948 meets informally across the hall in 1 South Winthrop, and 1950, Bowdoin's largest class, gathers again in 17 North Appleton.

The Baccalaureate Service will be at four o'clock on Sunday, June 7. At 1:30 Friday afternoon, June 12, the Society of Bowdoin Women will dedicate trees at Coleman Hall in honor of the late Mrs. Frederick (Jane Coleman) Pickard. Phi Beta Kappa and the other fraternities will hold meetings at 3:15 p.m. the same day. And the traditional reception by President and Mrs. Coles will take place at the Moulton Union from 4 to 5:30 Friday afternoon. Most of the reunion classes have arranged outings and dinners for Friday afternoon and evening.

On Saturday, June 13, the Commencement Procession will form at 9:30 a.m., followed by the 154th Commencement Exercises at 10 in the First Parish Church and then by the traditional Commencement Dinner and Ladies' Luncheon. Alumni and male guests will gather in the Arena for the usual lobster (or chicken) salad, and the ladies will dine in the Gymnasium.

Recent Bequests

The College has received notice of the following legacies from alumni and friends:

$1,000 from each of two separate trusts established by Francis W. Dana '94 and his wife. The income is unrestricted as to use.

$20,000 from the estate of Leon A. Dodge '13 to establish the "Dodge Fund." The income from this fund is to be used annually for a scholarship for the most deserving Bowdoin student who was graduated from Lincoln Academy, to be selected by the President of the College. In addition to this specific bequest, Mr. Dodge's will provides that Bowdoin will participate in the ultimate distribution of a trust fund which is subject to certain life tenancies.

$20,000 from the estate of Lester Gumbel '06 to establish the "Joseph and Lester Gumbel Scholarship Fund," the income from which is to be used for scholarships in the discretion of the Trustees of the College.

$73,673 from the estate of Adelaide L. Hutchinson, to establish two funds in memory of her father, Winfield S. Hutchinson '67. Income from one of these funds is to be used for the "Winfield S. Hutchinson Scholarships." The other fund establishes the "Winfield S. Hutchinson Library Fund," with income to be used for the purchase of books for the Library.

$15,000 from the estate of William W. Lawrence '98, to establish the "William W. Lawrence Fund," with income to be used for the purchase and maintenance of Library books on language, literature, and art; and for the general use and upkeep of Hubbard Hall and the Walker Art Building. Mr. Lawrence also left his personal library to the College.

Approximately $4,300 from the estate of Edward W. Moore

'03. Under the provisions of his will, Mr. Moore left all his property to the College without restriction.

$500 from the estate of Edith B. Perkins in memory of John Carroll Perkins H'04, to be used to purchase books on architecture, fine arts, and landscape architecture.

The remainder of the estate of John L. Roberts '11, amounting to approximately $20,000, to be held in trust by the College, the income to be used to assist a scholar to do research in any field he may choose. The selection of the recipient is left to the President.

In addition to these specific bequests, the College has learned recently that it will receive approximately $67,000 from the Estate of Sarah Maude Kaemmerling. The well-to-do-widow of a Navy admiral, she lived in Philadelphia and summered in Norway, Maine. Because of her interest in Maine she was contacted during the period of the Sesquicentennial Fund.

When Mrs. Kaemmerling died three years ago, she specified in her will that one-fifth of her residuary estate should go to educational institutions. She also left notes indicating interest in six colleges, of which Bowdoin is one. The College will receive its share of her estate in the form of securities to be added to the endowment funds. The gift will be made without restriction as to use, with the suggestion that the income be used for scholarship or loan purposes.

It is interesting to note that through the past 150 years bequests have provided approximately two-thirds of the College's endowment funds. Anyone interested in including Bowdoin in his will should contact either the President or the Vice President of the College or his own lawyer or bank officer.

On The Campus

This year nearly $60,000 in pre-matriculation scholarships has been awarded to 55 freshmen who will enter Bowdoin in September. Twenty of these awards are from specified, endowed funds, five are from special grants (including General Motors, Sloan, and National Merit scholarships), and the remainder are made possible by the Alumni Fund.

By the twenty-second of May, 55 entering freshmen had accepted the awards offered them. The average scholarship is $1,000, almost equivalent to tuition ($1,050), but awards range from $200 to $1,500, depending upon variations in the need and ability of the recipients.

This year, for the first time, further funds in loans and campus employment, in addition to the amount granted in outright scholarships, were offered to about 30 of the scholarship winners. This new bursary program seems to have had absolutely no effect on the normal pattern and percentage of acceptance by the matriculants. Undoubtedly this marks an important step toward greater use of combined scholarship-loan-job funds in meeting the increasing costs of higher education.

The freshmen who will enter Bowdoin with pre-matriculation scholarships next fall come from all parts of the nation. There will be, for example, boys from Bar Harbor, Seattle, Wash., Casper, Wyo., New York, and New Jersey, as well as a National Merit Scholar from Fairhaven, Mass.

By the twenty-second of May, 218 members of the Class of 1963 had declared their intention to be at Bowdoin in the fall. All indications are that this class will be one of the finest in Bowdoin's history — one with perhaps even greater academic promise and athletic and extra-curricular potential than the present strong Class of 1962.

Undergraduate Honors

Four seniors have been chosen to deliver Commencement parts on Saturday morning, June 13. They are Peter N. Anastas jr. of Gloucester, Mass., G. Raymond Babineau of Hempstead, N. Y., David A. Kranes of Belmont, Mass., and R. Whitney Mitchell '58 of Stoneham, Mass. Selected as alternate was George A. Westerberg of Auburn.

Donald M. Bloch '60 of Lynn, Mass., received the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Cup at a special ceremony at the morning chapel exercises on April 22. Given by Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, the cup is inscribed each year with the name of "that member of the three lower classes whose vision, humanity, and courage most contribute to making Bowdoin a better college."

Carleton E. Perrin '60 of Falmouth Foreside has been awarded the Westinghouse Achievement Scholarship in Chemistry. This $500 award, granted for the next academic year, is made possible by the Westinghouse Educational Foundation. The recipient is chosen at the end of his junior year on the basis of high achievement in academic work and demonstrated qualities of leadership. Perrin entered Bowdoin as the winner of a State of Maine Scholarship.

Zetes Win Sing

For the second year in a row members of Zeta Psi fraternity captured the coveted Wass Cup at the annual Interfraternity Sing, held on April 16. Beta Theta Pi was once again runner-up.

Psi Upsilon and Sigma Nu, which finished third and fourth respectively, were awarded the George W. Graham Improvement Cup, given by the Dekes to "that fraternity which shows the most significant improvement in the course of a year."

Delta Sigma finished fifth and Alpha Delta Phi sixth, followed by Chi Psi, Kappa Sigma, Alpha Tau Omega, Theta Delta Chi, Alpha Rho Upsilon, and Delta Kappa Epsilon. The Dekes would appear to be in a good position from which to launch an attempt to win the Graham Cup next April!

Basic Research Symposium

President James S. Coles attended a three-day Symposium on Basic Research in New York City from May 14 to 16 under the joint auspices of the National Academy of Sciences, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation.

The primary purpose of the symposium was to examine under the scrutiny of distinguished scientists the status in both amount and character of the support which government, industry, and private sources are contributing to produce the new knowledge on which must rest all future development in applied science, technology, and the national defense.

The three sponsoring organizations tendered a dinner to the contributing scientists, as well as to business leaders and others interested in the promotion of basic research, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on May 14. President Eisenhower was a participant at the dinner.

Included among the speakers at the symposium were Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer of the Institute for Advanced Study, Dr. Alan T. Waterman H'58 of the National Science Foundation, and Dr. William O. Baker of Bell Telephone Laboratories.

Livingston Testimonial

The February, 1959, issue of Romance Philology is a testimonial to Charles H. Livingston, who taught French at Bowdoin from 1921 until 1956 and still makes his home in Brunswick in very active retirement.

Included in the volume is an analytical bibliography of Professor Livingston's works, compiled by Professor Robert H. Ivy jr. of the Bowdoin faculty. There is also an article by Professor Edward B. Ham '22 entitled "Textual Criticism and Common Sense." Gerard

Summer at Bowdoin: Visitors Welcome

The College will again provide free guide service for summer visitors. Tours of the campus will leave Massachusetts Hall between 9 and 5, Monday through Saturday.

Most of the college offices will maintain their regular hours. The Admissions Office will be open for visitors and people wanting interviews between 9 and 12 and 1:30 and 4, Monday through Friday, and from 9 to 12 on Saturday mornings. Alumni, parents, and prospective candidates for admission are strongly advised to write ahead for specific appointments.

The Library will be open from 10 to 12:30 and 1:30 to 4:00 on Monday through Saturday, except for holidays. During the summer institutes (June 29-August 7) the Library will maintain evening hours, 7 to 10, Monday through Thursday.

The Moulton Union will also be open during the summer institutes. Hours for the Union Bookstore will be 11 until 2, Monday through Friday. The dining room and kitchen facilities are reserved for members of the institutes and their families, and no meals will be served to others. Between June 29 and August 7 the sleeping rooms in the Union may be rented for a modest fee.

The Walker Art Building will maintain its regular hours, and the public is welcome, free of charge, from 10 to 12 and from 2 to 4, Monday through Saturday. Sunday hours are from 2 to 4. Visitors to the Wednesday and Saturday matinees of the summer playhouse in Pickard Theater will find the museum open an hour earlier, at one o'clock, on those afternoons.

J. Brault, Instructor in French at the College, has written a note on "The Date of French berner," and Basil J. Guy '47, Professor Thomas C. Van Cleve H'54, and Blanchard W. Bates '31 have all written book reviews.

Thirty-one Bowdoin people were sponsors for the testimonial issue, and forty-three others were donors.

Professor Ivy wrote in his analytical bibliography as follows: "This bibliography of Professor Livingston's scholarly writings has been compiled in an effort to indicate the rich and varied product of nearly forty years of research; research, I might add, which is still continuing at an undiminished pace. As impressive as this product may appear, it represents merely one aspect of Professor Livingston's activity. His greatest achievement is undoubtedly the influence he has exerted over so many students who, in their turn, have entered the academic profession."

Yakov Malkiel, editor of Romance Philology, writes of Professor Livingston's book Skein-Winding Reels — Studies in Word History and Etymology, "Yet however passionately one may disagree with Professor Livingston on details, there is no denying that our friend, the gentleman-scholar from New England, has contributed a significant and altogether charming book. Throughout, it is pleasantly serene in tone, betraying on close inspection a tactfully hidden personal touch, at no point an ostentatious display of irksome subjectivity. The lines have been drawn with a firm hand; the colors are subdued rather than riotous. On the scholarly side the book is rich in original findings, soundly argued in a prevailing climate of mild conservatism. It aptly illustrates the range of talents expected of a true etymologist: command of linguistic analysis and first-hand knowledge of the world at large, visual sensitivity, acoustic alertness, conjectural acumen; above all, controlled imagination."

Gross Fund

Bowdoin students doing special work in biology may be assisted by the newly established Alfred O. Gross Fund, set up by gifts presently amounting to $1,500. The fund honors Dr. Alfred O. Gross H'52, a member of the faculty at Bowdoin for 41 years and since 1953 Josiah Little Professor of Natural Science, Emeritus.

While this fund will be administered by the College, assistance from it is not limited to Bowdoin students. It is the desire of the donor that income from the fund may be used for such student projects as special research on Kent Island, travel to a given region or given library for particular work, purchase of special apparatus, and publication of results. Income may also be used in support of library material in ornithology.

Additions may be made to the principal of the fund, or gifts may be made for direct support of individual projects.

A graduate of the University of Illinois, Dr. Gross joined the Bowdoin faculty in 1912. In addition to his teaching duties, he served for nearly 20 years as Director of the Bowdoin Scientific Station at Kent Island in the Bay of Fundy. He has studied birds in every state in the country, in all the provinces of Canada, in Cuba, Haiti, Mexico, Costa Rica, Panama, Ecuador, and Colombia, in twenty European countries, in Africa, Turkey, and other countries of the Middle East, and in Pakistan, Malaya, India, and Japan in Asia.

He has taken about 15,000 photographs and 10,000 feet of motion pictures of birds during the course of his field work. In addition, he has a working library of 5,000 books and other publications on birds. He is the author of hundreds of articles on ornithology and has lectured on birds to hundreds of audiences.

Commencement Play

The Masque and Gown staged two performances of Shakespeare's Henry IV, Part I on May 16 and 18, the first one for Ivy Day guests.

Henry IV, Part I was last produced at Bowdoin at Commencement in June of 1948. This year's version will be repeated on Friday, June 12, as part of the 154th Commencement program.

Daniel G. Calder '60 of Lewiston will play the part of Sir John Falstaff, John E. Swierzynski '59 of South Portland will portray the role of Hotspur, and Neville A. Powers '62 of York Village will be Prince Hal.

The scene and act breaks will not bring down the curtain, and the action of the play will move from one scene to another without a break. There will be one intermission, between the third and fourth acts.

McWilliams Olympic Hopeful

Hammer thrower Bill McWilliams '57 of Dorchester, Mass., who was named to the 1956 All-American track and field team and narrowly missed an Olympic berth, is getting ready for a try at the 1960 Olympics, according to reports from Fort Benning, Ga., where he is now a second lieutenant and the School Brigade Special Services officer.

McWilliams is one of the top scorers in Maine State Meet history, with a three-year total of nine first places and three seconds, for 54 points. As a sophomore he won all four weight events, the discus, javelin, shot, and hammer. As a junior he repeated in the discus, shot, and hammer, and took a second in the javelin. In his senior year last spring he won the discus and the hammer and placed second in both the shot and the javelin.

As a junior he won first place in the N.C.A.A. meet in Berkeley, Calif., with a heave of 195 feet, 3 inches, and tied with Al Hall of Cornell for first in the I.C.4-A meet in New York at 196 feet, 21½ inches. In the Olympic trials that year he finished seventh, with six men qualifying for the finals. He fouled his first two throws and hit 181 feet, 11½ inches on his third and last chance.

McWilliams, a graduate of Hanover

On April 20 the Alumni Council tendered its sixth annual dinner to graduating seniors. This photograph shows most of those seated at the head table in the Moulton Union: (l. to r.) Brendan Teeling '59, Class Secretary; Vice President Bela Norton '18; Class Agent-Designate Alfred Schretter '59; Trustee Earle Thompson '14; President James Coles; and Alumni Council President Leland Hovey '26. Also at the head table, but not in the photograph, were Overseer Gilbert Elliott '25, Class President Eugene Waters '59, Class Vice President Thomas McGovern '59, and Alumni Fund Vice Chairman Richard Thayer '28.

High School in Massachusetts, entered Bowdoin as the winner of the first Adriel U. Bird Scholarship. He was also a Charles Irwin Travelli Scholar for three years and as a sophomore won the Orren Chalmer Hornell Trophy for "high scholastic honors and skill in athletic competition."

At Commencement last June McWilliams received the Andrew A. Haldane Cup, given each year to a senior "who has outstanding qualities of leadership and character."

In his senior year McWilliams also went out for football for the first time in college and earned his letter as a full-back.

Spring Sports

Colby dominated State Series athletics in 1958-59, winning three championships outright and tying for another out of a possible seven.

Colby teams captured the football, baseball, and tennis titles and tied for the basketball crown. Maine followed with two outright titles and one tie, winning the skiing and track championships and tying for the basketball title. Bowdoin came out on top in golf, and Bates was blanked during the year. Bowdoin also won the crown in sailing, a sport in which Bates does not compete.

In the five sports in which the results of dual contests determined the championship team, Colby outdistanced its three rivals by a wide margin. The Mules lost only four contests and tied one out of 30 in football, basketball, baseball, tennis, and golf. Maine was second with a 15-15 record, Bowdoin third with a 9-19-2 mark, and Bates fourth with 9-20-1.

During 1958-59 Bowdoin tied for third with Bates in football, finished fourth in basketball, tied for second with Bates and Maine in tennis, was on top in golf and sailing, was third in baseball and track, and captured second in skiing.

Highlights of the spring season for Bowdoin included a 3-3 tie with Colby in baseball, the only black mark on the Mules' State Series record, a 5-1 finish in State Series golf, and continuing stand-out performances in track by Captain Larry Wilkins. In the State Meet on May 9 Wilkins won the 220 yard dash and the 220 yard low hurdles and finished a close second in the 100 yard dash, for a total of 13 points. In the Easterns the following week he won both the 100 and the low hurdles. At the New Englands on May 23 he scored Bowdoin's total of five points with a third in the 100 and a fourth in the low hurdles. Wilkins rates as one of the top Bowdoin trackmen of all time.

Three Polar Bears were named to the All-Maine baseball team, along with five men from Colby, two from Maine, and one from Bates. The Bowdoin representatives are pitcher Ron Woods, catcher Tony Berlandi, and second baseman Dick Morse. Woods and Berlandi are both seniors, and Morse is a junior. In State Series play Morse was the fourth leading hitter with an average of .375, and Berlandi won slugging honors with an average of .640. He had 16 total bases, high for the season, in 25 times at bat, and an average of .320. Berlandi had the most doubles with three and the most runs scored with seven. Berlandi and George Entin, a junior, who also plays quarterback on the football team and dives for the swimming team, tied with a Colby man and a Maine man for the lead in runs batted in with six each.

As a team Bowdoin scored the most runs, 44, and had the most doubles, eight, the most triples, five, and the most total bases, 82. Bren Teeling hit .350 to become the seventh leading batter in the Series, followed by Berlandi in eighth, Entin (.316) in ninth, and Macey Rosenthal (.308) in tenth.

The promising freshman class looked good in spring sports, as it had in the fall and also in the winter. The tennis squad, in particular, was outstanding, defeating its first five opponents by a 9 to 0 score, including the Colby yearlings and Brunswick High School, Maine state champions among the schoolboys. Prospects are definitely good for the next three years in that sport.

The sailing team continued to capture both regional and national honors, winning the Jan T. Friis Trophy in the first annual New England States Intersectional Sailing Regatta, placing third in the Boston Dinghy competition, and finishing fifth in the New England.

The golf team, losing only to Colby in its six State Series matches, also numbered Army, M.I.T., and Rhode Island among its victims.

May 12 was the most satisfying day of the season for the Polar Bears. Four teams traveled to Waterville to meet their Colby counterparts. The varsity baseball team tied the Mules 3 to 3 in a game called because of rain after 11 innings. The freshman tennis team downed the Baby Mules 9 to 0 without yielding a single set, winning a total of 109 games in the nine matches to only 25 for Colby. The golf team won 5 to 4 in a very close match, and the Bowdoin freshmen handed the Colby Frosh their first baseball loss in five games with a 2 to 1 win. Revenge was sweet indeed.

Ryan Replaces McCuller

Lt. Col. Edward A. Ryan, U.S.A., has been appointed Professor of Military Science and Tactics at Bowdoin, effective June 22. He will become Commanding

Officer of the Reserve Officers Training Corps Battle Group upon the departure of Lt. Col. Louis P. McCuller, who, after serving in that capacity since 1957, has recently been reassigned to overseas duty.

A native of Boston, Colonel Ryan is presently Executive Officer of the Department of Communication and Electronics at the U.S. Army Artillery and Missile School at Fort Sill, Okla. He holds the Bronze Star and five battle stars for as many European campaigns during World War II, when he served in Germany with the 629th Tank Destroyer Battalion and later the 75th Infantry Division.

He is a 1935 graduate of Rhode Island State College (now the University of Rhode Island), where he played football and baseball. Following his graduation he was for five years with the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company in Providence, R. I., until he was inducted into Federal service with the 103rd Field Artillery in 1941.

Broadway At Bowdoin

The Brunswick Summer Playhouse will open a ten-week season of well known Broadway musicals, beginning on Monday, June 29, in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. Lawrence Brooks of Westbrook and New York will star as Edvard Grieg in the opening production, "Song of Norway." He created this part on Broadway.

Each year several Bowdoin scholarship students enroll in medical school. Any alumni having or knowing of microscopes which might be made available would do some future doctor a good turn by getting in touch with Philip S. Wilder '23, Director of Student Aid, Massachusetts Hall.

In succeeding weeks the shows will include "Oklahoma," "The King and I," "Showboat," "Brigadoon," "The Student Prince," "Guys and Dolls," "The Most Happy Fella," and "Call Me Madam."

Miss Victoria Crandall, the producer of the summer series, has spent summers for some years in Wiscasset, where her parents are year-round residents.

With its 600 comfortably upholstered seats, electronic switchboard, 50-foot fly gallery, and spacious stage, the Pickard Theater is ideal for the production of musical shows.

The Brunswick Summer Playhouse will give performances Monday through Saturday at 8:30 p.m., with Wednesday and Saturday matinees at 2:30 p.m.

Betas Win In Debating

Beta Theta Pi won first place in the finals of the Wilmot Brookings Mitchell interfraternity debating competition, held on April 8, defeating Delta Sigma. The winning team was made up of Nicholas E. Monsour '61 of Bethel Park, Pa., and Theodore A. Perry '60 of Waterville, while J. Temple Bayliss '61 of Sabot, Va., and Frank C. Mahncke '60 of Morristown, N. J., represented Delta Sigma.

The subject of debate was, "Resolved, that co-education at the college level is a sounder educational philosophy than is segregation of the sexes." Beta Theta Pi upheld the affirmative, and Delta Sigma the negative.

Books

WILLIAM C. RICHARDS and WILLIAM J. NORTON, Biography of a Foundation, 1929-1954: Children's Fund of Michigan, 1957; pp. 195.

Anyone who reads this unusual volume will gain new respect for rugged individualism and the vision of a wealthy man who also was an outspoken Senator from Michigan.

Senator James Couzens made a fortune as one of the original associates of Henry Ford. In 1915, "closing this period of his story book life and giving up an annual $150,000 salary," he withdrew from the Ford enterprises and devoted himself to public affairs, serving successively as Police Commissioner of Detroit, as Mayor, and, for the last dozen years of his life, as United States Senator from Michigan. For many years he was troubled about the lack of adequate care for children and felt that something should be done about it. In 1929, with characteristic modesty and yet with farsightedness, he established the Children's Fund of Michigan. He had decided to give $10,000,000 to promote child welfare, stipulating that both the principal and its earnings were to be spent in 25 years. Later gifts increased the fund to $11,880,700. When this foundation was formed, it was one of the fifteen largest and it was estimated that there were only 280 such trusts in existence. Today foundations are numbered by the thousands. In 1929 this gift was the largest devoted exclusively to child care in Michigan and made Senator Couzens one of the most generous philanthropists in the state.

The Senator did not wish his name used in the title of the foundation. Its purpose would be to supply funds to agencies working competently in special fields but needing additional resources for expansion and perhaps above all to kindle new interest in child health by developing and demonstrating improvements in this field, with special attention to what might be called backward areas in Michigan or elsewhere.

This "biography" shines like a beacon in the contemporary records and reports on foundations and philanthropy. It is unique as a narrative report which tells the story of what this foundation did in 25 years. It begins at the beginning and flows smoothly and with interest to a climax. And it includes helpful appendices recording the legal and financial details as well as a useful index. The reader does not need a special interest in foundations to find great human interest and warmth in this book. The style reflects the personalities of the donor and those who carried out his wishes. The Children's Fund served through years of depression, through World War II and the post-war years, with such resourcefulness that it must still be a vital force in the State of Michigan. Senator Couzens died in 1936, but if he could have attended the dinner that marked the conclusion of the fund program May 1, 1954, he surely would have approved what had been done. The silent tribute which followed his daughter's speech gave proof of the great affection which those connected with the Fund had for him.

There is special interest in the achievements of this Fund for Bowdoin men because its operating head and the Secretary of the Trustees was William J. Norton '05. Known to Senator Couzens and many Bowdoin men as "Bill," he provided the continuity as Executive Vice President and Secretary throughout the twenty-five years of the Fund's existence. His name appears as collaborator with William C. Richards in writing this biography. We suspect that because Mr. Richards died before he could finish his assignment most of this book is the work of Bill Norton. At any rate, the conception of this volume as the record of a unique and highly successful foundation is an accomplishment that reflects the skill and devotion of all who were associated in this fine public service. Other foundations can benefit from this human document. Someday social historians may find it a mine of information as they explore the record of American philanthropy in the first half of the Twentieth Century.

FREDERICK L. GWYNN and JOSEPH L. PLOTNER, The Fiction of J. D. Salinger; University of Pittsburgh Press, 1958; pp. 59; $1.50.

The Fiction of J. D. Salinger by Frederick L. Gwynn and Joseph L. Plotner is the fourth of a series of critical essays in English and American literature published by the University of Pittsburgh Press. The essay is designed for the general reader as well as the scholar, and the subject and treatment of it are admirably adapted for such a purpose. Salinger's work has been broken down into three periods: an apprentice period, a classic period, and a period combining religion and social satire ("Seen through the Glass Family, Darkly," a witticism that the Salingerite will appreciate). The early work, which was published largely in the slicks, is not distinguished, scarcely superior to the usual level of such fiction. The half dozen stories and the novel, The Catcher in the Rye, of the classic period established Salinger's reputation and form, certainly, his most popular work to date. The most recent work has reached out for a larger synthesis, especially through Zen Buddhism, but in so doing the religious emphasis has tended "to overflow the style and drown all." The pace has bogged down, and long, subjective speeches have taken the place of the sharp observation of the best of the earlier work.

Few readers are likely to quarrel with the verdict of Mr. Gwynn and Mr. Plotner. Admirers of Salinger will be grateful for the lucid account of the early stories, though they will probably not be tempted to dig out the stories for themselves, and they will surely agree that the later work has been a disappointment. Mr. Gwynn and Mr. Plotner select "For Esme — with Love and Squalor" as the high point of Salinger's art; there are those, I am sure, who will plump for the more familiar Catcher; but such an aesthetic problem is perhaps less a matter of reason than of faith. The critical analyses are always stimulating and concrete. The method is that of the new criticism, but it is the new criticism unobscured by jargon and pretentiousness. The authors never insist that the serious must be ponderous or the light frivolous.

But what, after all, is the significance of Salinger and of the astonishing popularity that he has enjoyed in the past few years, especially on the college campus? Not long ago a student told me that he had read The Catcher in the Rye "at least a dozen times," and I remember, at the end of an English major oral (still one hour at Bowdoin), the student who, when asked what English or American author he would read by preference (with the whole of English literature spread before him and presumably fresh in his mind), replied without a moment's pause: "Salinger." At that point it was the English department's turn to pause. For if Salinger's world is fresh and witty, even warm and affectionate, it is also neurotic, sophisticated, and oddly hepped up, a world of Bananafish, Uncle Wiggilies (sic), and suicides, where childhood has lost its innocence and maturity is about as available as the grapes of Tantalus. But perhaps the answer too lies here, in that middle ground between childhood and adulthood; and Salinger's secret is that he has caught so supremely the tensions, gaieties, insecurities that haunt adolescence — also the adolescent in each of us.

EDWIN B. BENJAMIN

NEALE E. HOWARD, Handbook for Observing the Satellites; Thomas Y. Crowell Company, 1958; pp. 136; $2.50.

In the relatively few years since Kitty Hawk, the scientist and the layman no longer consider flight in heavier-than-air craft something for the adventurer, but now are even seriously considering travel to the moon or other planets a possibility. The technological advances illustrated by the satellite rocket programs have caught the imagination of the general public. This interest accounts for the tremendous support that the Moonwatch Program has received from amateur observers all over the world, probably the greatest direct assistance to a scientific program ever made by laymen.

The major problem, once a satellite has been launched, is to plot its orbit. Radio signals from the satellite itself are, of course, helpful in locating it, but its position at a given instant of time must be known more precisely. The Moonwatch teams, in effect, constitute an "optical fence" through which the satellite must pass. After enough visual sightings have been made, a preliminary orbit can be computed by modern high-speed computers, and then the satellite may be tracked by the Phototrack teams with a greater accuracy than is possible from visual observation.

Finally, in the "dying moments" of its flight, when its orbit is changing rapidly, the Moonwatch teams again are alerted. When the satellite is in the denser atmosphere, it starts to glow and finally burn as a meteor. Now the teams watch for color, magnitude, direction, and speed by visual observation.

The interested amateur is the person for whom this book is written, one who knows only the "Big Dipper" and who wants to join the Moonwatch team. The author has a difficult task to explain, in elementary terms, the complexities of satellites: why they follow their paths or orbits; how to estimate their passage for the observer's location; optical instruments. On the whole, the book maintains the middle course between the "Do-it-yourself" manual and the college text.

The first chapter, which discusses the physics of planetary motion, is the most difficult to write for readers with non-technical training. This is the weakest chapter in the book, one that apparently did not entirely satisfy the author. To be effective this chapter should trace the history of the problem of planetary motion: the Ptolemaic system and its circles on circles, the Copernican system, the observations of Tycho Brahe and the computation of Kepler, before discussing Newton. Then the motion of satellites or artificial moons about the Earth would follow the same pattern as planets about the sun. The concentration of information in this chapter may discourage some readers so they will not attempt the more direct chapters that follow.

Once over this hurdle, the author seems more at ease. Chapter 2 surveys the charts and maps which may be used to fix the time and place of a satellite passage. Chapters 3 and 4 discuss binoculars and telescopes, first as optical instruments and then as aids in satellite watching. Mr. Howard's discussion of items to look for when buying binoculars contains all the pertinent information, clearly presented, so that anyone should find this a useful guide for choosing either binoculars or telescopes for watching anything from birds to moons. The directions for using these instruments are accompanied by statements of the reasons for the suggested procedure, which should appeal to the intelligent observer.

Chapter 5 contains details necessary for someone interested in active participation in the Moonwatch Program, while Chapter 6 discusses similar material for the Phototrack Program.

The next chapter attempts to summarize the contribution that satellites are making and will make to man's knowledge of the earth and its environment. Unfortunately, new data is being processed and released so fast that much of the detail in this chapter will soon be outdated. Again the author seems to find this material more difficult to present, possibly because he has not had so much direct experience with these subjects. Describing physical terms in non-technical language is hazardous and imprecise; yet there still seems to be confusion about the mean-free-path of a molecule.

The appendices contain useful charts and tables which will be helpful in establishing a Moonwatch station. A good index and supplementary references are also included.

This book does contain much useful information that will help to answer the layman's questions, and the presentation is much better than in most of the books of this type.

Authors

WILLIAM J. NORTON '05, who was graduated magna cum laude, holds three honorary degrees: LL.D., Wayne University (1934); Sc.D., Bowdoin (1938); and LL.D., University of Michigan (1941). Much of his early career was devoted to social work and teaching. From 1929 until 1954 he served as Executive Vice President of the Children's Fund of Michigan.

FREDERICK L. GWYNN '37 (cum laude), A.M. and Ph.D., Harvard, emerged from World War II as a Navy lieutenant commander with decorations from three nations. The author of Sturge Moore and the Life of Art (1951) and editor of the monthly College English, Dr. Gwynn has been a faculty member at Harvard, Pennsylvania State College, and the University of Virginia. Last fall he began his duties as Chairman of the Department of English at Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.

NEALE E. HOWARD '37, who served as a lieutenant in the Navy during World War II, has been a preparatory school teacher for many years. Since 1945 he has been at the Millbrook School, Millbrook, N. Y., where he teaches courses in science and mathematics.

Reviewers

BELA W. NORTON '18 (summa cum laude), A.M. '52, has been Vice President of the College since 1953, with responsibility for Bowdoin's development program and public relations. For many years Mr. Norton was active in newspaper and public relations work in New York City, and from 1932 until 1953 he was with Colonial Williamsburg, Inc., first as Director of Public Relations and later as Executive Vice President.

EDWIN B. BENJAMIN '37 (summa cum laude), Assistant Professor of English, joined the Bowdoin faculty in 1953. Next fall he will begin new duties as Associate Professor of English at Temple University in Philadelphia. Holder of two advanced degrees from Harvard and a veteran of Army service during World War II, Dr. Benjamin formerly taught at Hamilton College, Yale, Wesleyan University, and Kyushu University in Japan.

ELROY O. LACASCE, JR. '44 (cum laude), Assistant Professor of Physics and son and brother of Bowdoin men, completed his graduate studies with an M.A. at Harvard and a Ph.D. at Brown. Except for some time away to do graduate work, he has been a member of the Bowdoin faculty since 1947.

Bowdoin Browsing

The author of this "Browsing" column is Lloyd O. (Doc) Coulter of the Class of 1918, a retired Vice President and Director of the New York advertising firm of McCann-Erickson, Inc. A native of Marinette, Wis., Mr. Coulter served during World War I as an Army lieutenant and was awarded the French Croix de Guerre. He was also for some years an advertising and sales executive for several concerns in Europe and Africa. For the past two years he has been Class Secretary and Alumni Fund Agent for 1918.

DEDICATION:

To the Faculty
*College teachers, so they say,
Must cast their fairest pearls away:
A sort of fate the scribe abhors
Who cannot even flunk his boars!*

BACK TO THE WARS

As this is being written, the death of John Salling, 112 year old Confederate veteran, severs the last living link with the Army of Northern Virginia and that remarkable group of general officers who comprised its high command. With the single exception of the Grand Armée, no other fighting force was ever led by such an array of talent.

The story of each is dramatically told in an outstanding work: D. S. Freeman's Lee's Lieutenants (Scribners) and, to American readers the less well known, A. S. Macdonell's Napoleon and his Marshals (MacMillan, London).

They had much in common. Both the Lieutenantcy and the Marshalate were, in aggregate, amazingly young by modern standards. Both sparkled with dashing cavalymen and artillerists such as Murat and Stuart, Mourmont and Pegram. Nearly all were talented tacticians, but only three proved their capacity for independent command: Davout and Massena of the Emperor's eagles; Jackson of Lee's.

There the parallel ends. Lee had no Chief-of-Staff comparable to Bertier. With few exceptions his general officers were drawn from a static society comprising the planter and professional class of the slave-owning South. Bonaparte's came from every stratum, boiled to the top in the cauldron of revolution.

These sans-culottes and renegade aristos were hungry fighters who slashed and hammered their way up and down the map from the Seine to the Vistula, from the North Sea to the Nile — acquiring fortunes, beautiful women, dukedoms, and two thrones in the process.

The aristocratic crust of Southern leadership was too brittle, too thin to withstand the grinding attrition of a sanguinary war. One man in a thousand has the stuff to lead a brigade, one in ten thousand, a corps. After Antietam, Chancellorsville, and the Wilderness there simply weren't enough of such men remaining.

Though imperial in name and purpose and decked with orders and titles, the Marshalate was the more democratic command-cadre of the two because its roots went deeper into its ranks and society. One more reason why the Grand Armee prevailed against its enemies for nearly a generation while the Army of Northern Virginia melted away in four bitter years.

DIG ME LATER

Like the iceberg, only a fraction of man's works appears above the surface. This is a happy circumstance for nature lovers who are grateful for such views as remain unencumbered with man's efforts at self-expression. It is also fortuitous for archaeologists who have been haying at it with pick and shovel ever since 1485.

Late last year Alfred Knopf published the third, and presumably the final, volume of a trilogy on this exciting search for artifacts, The March of Archaeology. It is by G. W. Ceram (a pen name), who published the best-selling Gods, Graves, and Men in 1951 and The Secret of the Hittites in 1956.

March is copiously illustrated with 16 color plates and scores of drawings and photographs, some not published heretofore. The book is a unique combination of blended text and picture that moves as irresistibly as a detective story; a sort of "Omnibus" documentary and a serialized art or science feature by Life.

Once he has begun, no one who, as a boy, ever day-dreamed of parchment maps and Spanish doubloons or poked about in some mound for flint arrowheads can read far without doing a Walter Mitty and successively identifying himself with such heroes of archaeology as Schliemann, Carter, or Wooley. Nor can he lay it down in disagreement with Flinders Petrie, who said: "Imagination is the fire of discovery."

AROOSTOOK

Dean Nathaniel Kendrick was the guest speaker at the spring meeting of the Aroostook County Bowdoin Club, held on May 13 at the Northeastland Hotel in Presque Isle. President Nathaniel Barker '29 presided, with about 40 alumni present. Parkin Briggs '29 was elected President and Francis Pierce '42 Secretary-Treasurer. Club members indicated an interest in holding two meetings a year, one in the fall and one in the spring, and there is further interest in having a ladies' night.

BUFFALO

On April 3 members of the Bowdoin Club of Buffalo gathered at the University Club for a social hour and dinner. Retiring Convener Morgan Heussler '46 opened the meeting with a few words of greeting and then turned it over to the new Convener and Council Member, Robert Delaney '55, who accepted the Thorndike Oak gavel.

President Coles brought recent news of the College and discussed various aspects of the financing of higher education. His remarks were followed by half an hour of questions and answers. George Craighead '25 played a tape recording of music by the Glee Club.

In addition to those already mentioned, those present were Clay '30, Milner '31, Gove '38, Fay '49, Bradley '51, Dye '52, Kelleran '52, Sherrerd '52, Jackson '54, G. Phillips '54, and Woodruff '58.

Plans are being made for an informal summer gathering, and some members are interested in the possibilities of sub-freshman meetings in the area.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

About 25 alumni and guests gathered at the LeMoyne Manor in suburban Syracuse on April 4 for the spring meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Central New York. Following a social hour and dinner President Coles brought news of the College.

Alumni attending included President Jack O'Donnell '37, Secretary Tom Chapman

'50, Cooley '15, Chapman '17, Hildreth '18, Sawyer '28, Fogg '43, Crockford '50, Herrick '50, Sylvan '52, and Leacacos '53.

CONNECTICUT

Professor Herbert Brown and Coach Robert Donham were guests of the Bowdoin Club of Connecticut at its annual meeting at the Hotel Bond in Hartford on April 9. Alumni, wives, subfreshmen, parents, and schoolmen turned out in good numbers for a social hour and dinner.

Retiring President Benjamin Whitcomb '30 presided. Bob Donham spoke briefly, and Herbie Brown gave the main speech. Dr. Charles Barbour '33 was elected President, and Charles Scoville '52 was re-elected Secretary-Treasurer.

MERRIMACK VALLEY

About 40 alumni from the Merrimack Valley, North Shore, and Boston Bowdoin Clubs attended a testimonial dinner for Adam Walsh at the Andover Country Club on April 9. Dean Nathaniel Kendrick represented the College.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Secretary Pike Rounds '20 reports as follows: "The Bowdoin Club of New Hampshire held its spring meeting on Friday, May 15, at the Concord Country Club. There were 40 present, including our guests. Retiring President Dutch Morse '42 presided and turned the meeting over to Professor Paul Hazelton '42, who acted as moderator for a panel discussion on topics of interest in the school and college world, including the subject of admissions. The members of the panel were William G. Saltonstall H'52, Principal of Phillips Exeter Academy; Donald C. Hagerman, Headmaster of the Holderness School; and T. Holmes Moore, Headmaster of the New Hampton School."

The following officers were elected for 1959-60: President, Donald R. Bryant '37;

PORTLAND

Valle's in Scarborough was the site for the spring dinner meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Portland on May 5, when about 65 alumni and guests gathered for a social hour and dinner.

President Jotham Pierce '39 presided. He reviewed several matters of interest, among them the size of the club area and the monthly luncheons, which will continue through the summer.

In an informal talk, President Coles discussed the state of the College. He mentioned the faculty, various views of the College, the Bowdoin fraternity system, admissions, and the increasingly complex matter of financing higher education.

Announcement was again made that those who wish to make reservations for the luncheons, held on the first Wednesday of every month at the Cumberland Club, should contact Luncheon Chairman Dave Osgood '53 at his Canal National Bank office (SPruce 2-1941). He must have a firm count at least one week in advance. The club's guest on June 3 will be Coach Nels Corey '39, and Professor Athern Daggett '25 will speak on July 1.

RHODE ISLAND

The Bowdoin Club of Rhode Island held its annual spring meeting at the Agawam Hunt Club on May 13, with about 40 alumni and guests present for a social hour and dinner.

Following the meal, retiring President Herbert Hanson '43 introduced three members of the Class of 1963 who live in the area. The following new officers were elected: President, Walter Donahue '44; Secretary, Edwin Lundwall '50; Treasurer, William Hartley '53; and Council Member, Herbert Hanson.

Assistant Director of Admissions Robert Glover '56 described the admissions process and praised the Rhode Island group for its effective efforts in bringing the College and talented subfreshmen together. Tangible proof of the success of such efforts is the eight to ten Rhode Island boys who will enter in September.

Peter Barnard '50 of the Alumni Office showed a collection of color slides, typical of the ones being used at alumni-subfreshman meetings, and commented on them. He and Mr. Glover answered questions, and the meeting was adjourned at an early hour.

The club's monthly luncheons are being discontinued for the summer but will be resumed on the first Wednesday of every month, beginning September 2.

WORCESTER

About 60 alumni, wives, subfreshmen, and parents gathered at the Worcester Country Club on April 29 for a dinner meeting, at which Dean Nathaniel Kendrick was the guest from the campus. Outgoing President

Ivan Spear '44 presided, and the following new officers were elected: President, Duncan Dewar '47; Vice President, Dr. Cecil McLaughlin '23; and Secretary-Treasurer and Council Member, Cloyd Small '20. New members of the Executive Committee are Paul Sibley '25, Dr. Philip Burke '44, and Dr. Earle Rice '46.

Dean Kendrick discussed Bowdoin's size and the general area of financial aid—scholarships, loans, and campus jobs. He also talked about the prospects for increased enrollments in all liberal arts colleges in the East.

BOWDOIN TEACHERS

Bowdoin teachers within easy traveling distance of Brunswick were invited to meet informally on the campus on April 24. The morning program included an informal reception, chapel, classes, and luncheon at the Moulton Union. In the afternoon Professor Albert Thayer '22 described the Oakes Center at Bar Harbor and the Speech Workshop to be conducted there for the second consecutive summer. Professor LeRoy Greason, Coordinator of Summer Sessions, discussed the history and present organization of summer work at Bowdoin and prospects for the future. Some of the teachers remained on the campus during the afternoon for informal discussions and visits to classes.

Necrology

1894 WILLIAM FERNALD ALLEN, for many years Superintendent of Schools in Southern Pines, N. C., died in New York City on April 8, 1959, at the age of 88. Born on November 30, 1870, in Marblehead, Mass., he prepared at Portland High School and following his graduation from Bowdoin was in the advertising business for some years. He later served as principal of Austin Academy in Strafford, N. H., the grammar school in Wolfeboro, N. H., the high school in Wilmington, Mass., and the high school in Plymouth, Mass. After many years in education in Southern Pines and in Goldsboro, N. C., he retired to Portland, where he made his home with Mrs. Allen. They moved to New York in 1949. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth C. Allen; and a sister, Mrs. Harry E. Rowe of Ellsworth. He was a member of Zeta Psi fraternity.

1897 JAMES HOWARD HORNE, for many years engaged in agriculture in Exeter, N. H., died on April 13, 1959, in Salem, N. H., at the age of 84. Born in Berlin, N. H., on July 24, 1874, he prepared at the local high school and at Bowdoin was an outstanding track man. At one time he held the State Meet records in the 100 and 220 yard dashes, the 120 yard high hurdles, and the 220 yard low hurdles. He also won the Wooden Spoon as a junior. He taught at Hebron Academy for a year and then was Director of Athletics and coach of football and track at the University of Indiana for eight years. His two sons are Bowdoin graduates. Robert '40 is director of psychology in the schools of Ventura, Calif., and Richard '52 is teaching chemistry in Arlington (Mass.) High School. Warren says, "If all goes well, we plan to spend our summers in New Hampshire and the rest of the year in warmer climes."

Class Secretary Al Gray reports a long, cold winter, with snow-covered ground from Thanksgiving until early April. "What I have learned about church politics serving as treasurer of the interim committee," he says. This committee is setting up a new community church to replace the present Federated Church.

Arthur Merrill, in the hospital recently for more than a week for a check-up, got a fairly favorable report on his general physical condition. In January and February he and Barbara had a fine vacation. They spent three weeks visiting their children in Connecticut, Long Island, Ohio, and Oklahoma. They also flew to Bermuda for a few days.

Percy and Eleanor Mitchell recently returned from a motor trip they took as far south as North Carolina. They report, "A real gypsy trip with small daily outlay, much rest, and great pleasure in the spring flowers and shrubs, especially in Virginia."

Myles Standish writes that retirement suits him fine. He has 170 acres in Marlboro, Mass., which keeps him busy and interested. He is still a director of the New England Trust Company. Recently he and Hester took a very enjoyable Caribbean cruise on a Grace Liner.

Ray Verrill writes, "I thoroughly enjoy retirement here in Richmond on a place never out of my wife's family, so full of traditions and memories. Our acreage of forest, a farm pond with trout, and a brook with some trout also prove most attractive to my grandson, a ninth generation Verrill."

Ray is carrying on a tree project and hopes soon to have a tree farm insignia for his yard. He is also much interested in the avifauna, being a charter member of the Buffalo Ornithological Society. "This winter in Florida," he writes, "I enjoyed observing many rare, and to me new, species."

Seen in the Portland Press Herald for February 3, 1959:

PRAYERS UNANSWERED

Comes a card from Dr. Adelaide Scanlon Sheehy, Roslyn Heights, Long Island, N. Y., announcing the birth of a daughter, Jan. 15.

That makes 10 for her, a pediatrician, and Dr. Thomas J. Sheehy jr., an obstetrician. He's a former Portland boy who was graduated from Bowdoin in 1940.

Little No. 10 is also No. 6. The Drs. Sheehy had four boys, then began praying for a girl. It got them five in a row.

Last fall, when they were anticipating No. 10, Dr. Thomas said, "Now we're praying for a boy."

He would have balanced the books, of course, at five and five. Now it'll take two more to strike a balance.

The new daughter weighed in at 9 pounds 2½ ounces and was named Ann Marie.

Congratulations, Drs. Thomas and Adelaide, and thanks for keeping us up to date.

The expedition was co-sponsored by the Harvard Museum and by the Peabody Museum at Yale, both of which will share the items collected. In addition to more than 5,500 birds, Ray and his co-worker brought back some mammals, reptiles, and amphibians. Ray also took hundreds of color slides and movies for lecture illustrations.

An article in the New Haven (Conn.) Sunday Register for March 22 described some of the aspects of Ray's trip. The party traveled on foot and by assorted vehicles, camels, mules, and dug-outs. Sometimes as many as 50 porters were used to carry hundreds of pounds of field equipment. The birds were either shot with a small-gauge shotgun or snared in black silk "mist nets." The specimens were skinned and stuffed with cotton and insecticide for shipment to this country.

The expedition began its work in Nepal and four months later moved to East Pakistan, at the base of the Himalayas, in a region infested with elephants. "We nearly ruined our nerves collecting among the elephants," Ray said, "and spent a number of mornings climbing trees or hunting near suitable emergency trees."

And when it wasn't elephants, it was tigers. In the Sunderbans, the flooded forests on the delta of the Ganges River, Ray and his group spent some weeks collecting in an area where many tigers feed on the abundant tree-eating deer and where a death by tiger among the native woodcutters occurs about once every two days.

Following collecting trips along the border of India and Nepal and in West Pakistan, the expedition concluded its work in the tribal district of the Khyber Pass and in the Himalayan kingdom of Swat. Ray and his assistants are now busy unpacking the specimens and classifying them.

Alumni participation in admissions activity this year reached a new high. There were nineteen informal sub-freshman meetings held in alumni homes in key areas. Of the nearly 350 boys who attended these meetings, 127 were admitted and 82 will enroll this fall. Fifty were refused admission, and 167 did not complete applications to Bowdoin. There was alumni interest in about 50% of the students who will attend Bowdoin this September. The Director of Admissions and the College greatly appreciate this alumni interest and look forward to its continuation in the future.

Seward Marsh Retires

Seward J. Marsh of the Class of 1912, Alumni Secretary at Bowdoin since 1942, retired on June 30 and became Alumni Secretary Emeritus. Appropriately enough, his retirement was announced at the annual meeting of the Alumni Association on June 11.

It ought to be easy for a man who as a freshman in the fall of 1941 worked in the Alumni Office part-time and thus preceded Seward Marsh in that office to write this editorial. It is, however, anything but easy despite our many years of friendship and working together — more than ten years together at Bowdoin all told.

It was altogether fitting and proper that at Commencement a year ago Seward Marsh should have received the Alumni Service Award — one of the few times he did not know what was going on in his office. It is equally fitting and proper that we reproduce here in its entirety the citation read at that time by Alumni Council President Louis Bernstein '22.

"TO SEWARD J. MARSH of the Class of 1912, Bowdoin's Alumni Secretary without peer and so recognized by the American Alumni Council, which elected him its President five years ago; a cheer leader as an undergraduate at Bowdoin and a cheer leader for the College ever since; successful businessman in Boston and Portland before returning to Bowdoin in 1942 as Alumni Secretary; for sixteen years editor of the ALUMNUS, guiding spirit of the Alumni Fund, and tactful, vital, and understanding link between 7900 alumni and their College; husband of a charming Smith girl and father of a charming Smith daughter, who, like her mother, had the wisdom to marry a Bowdoin man; long-time dreamer of an Alumni House in Brunswick; in grateful recognition of loyal, devoted service and in appreciation of literally thousands of services both great and small, always efficiently and gracefully rendered, his fellow alumni this day accord him their Alumni Service Award."

It is with a genuine feeling of regret that we tell alumni that for the last time with this issue the name of Seward J. Marsh appears on the masthead of the ALUMNUS as Editor. During his seventeen years as Editor and as Alumni Secretary many changes have come to pass at Bowdoin. Numerically, alumni have increased from about 5000 to more than 8000. The Alumni Fund has grown from $23,000 to within $8.00 of $196,000. Under his guidance the Alumni Council was largely responsible for the establishment of the Placement Bureau in 1944, for the appointment of a second man in the Admissions Office in 1948, for the appointment of a Vice President in charge of development and public relations in 1953. It was through his urging that following World War II the ALUMNUS was sent to all alumni.

So it is that we at Bowdoin, speaking for some 8000 of you, say to Seward, "Thank you for a difficult job well done. We accord you this day our heartfelt gratitude in 'recognition of loyal, devoted service and in appreciation of literally thousands of services, both great and small, always efficiently and gracefully rendered.'" May we see you and your "bride" frequently, both on the campus and at your retirement home in Topsham, where, we understand, the password is "Polar Bear."

THE COVER

The cover picture shows a couple of "old pros" talking things over at Commencement. Seward Marsh '12, at the right, retired at the end of June after 17 years as Alumni Secretary. Carleton Connor '36, at the left, as a volunteer alumni worker has served in almost every possible capacity — as Class Agent, as Fund Director and Fund Chairman, as a member-at-large of the Alumni Council and as Council President, and now, with his election on June 12, as an Overseer of the College. The picture was taken by Harry Shulman, veteran Brunswick area correspondent for the Portland Press Herald.

Bowdoin Day At Mystic Seaport

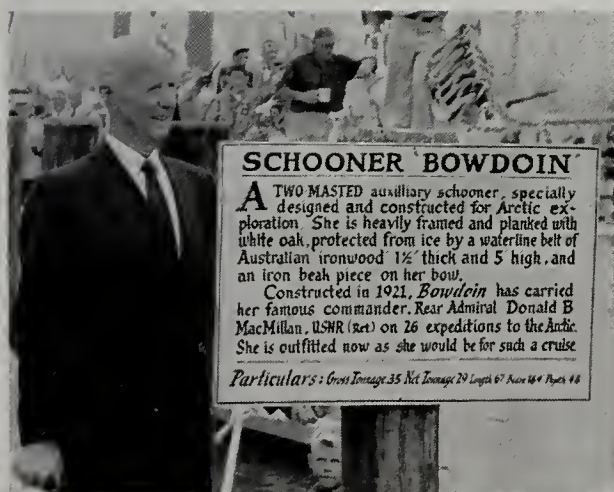

by PETER C. BARNARD '50

A SCOTTISH PIPE band in bright tartans and swinging kilts, a company of the Governor's footguards in Colonial uniform, and an impressive parade of ships of all sorts were some of the eye-catching aspects of Bowdoin Day at Mystic Seaport. It was Saturday, June 27, and all of those who were there and witnessed the ceremonies will never forget the colorful event.

Bowdoin Day at Mystic Seaport was the occasion for the permanent enshrining of the schooner Bowdoin, the specially-constructed Arctic vessel of Rear Admiral Donald B. Mac-Millan '98. It had been announced this past spring that the Bowdoin would at last have a safe home and snug harbor and the care which would ensure her lasting for many, many years. Instead of a rocky grave on some forlorn coast, or rough, unfeeling treatment at some insolent hand, this vessel has found a truly honorable berth as a proud member of a proud nautical company. One has to see and inspect the Mystic Seaport to appreciate the scope, historical significance, and importance of the place. Probably unique among museums and exhibitions open to the public, the Seaport is the home and repository of a vast variety of maritime memorabilia. Tied up on the other side of the Bowdoin's pier, for example, is the Australia, the oldest merchant schooner afloat, and directly across the slip at the next pier is the large and impressive Charles W. Morgan, the last existing wooden whaling ship in the world. A 19th century ferryboat, an authentic waterside array of buildings, including shops, a ropewalk, a tavern, a chapel, and a school, as well as museum buildings filled with whaling gear, scrimshaw, and other appurtenances of nautical life, are all around. This is truly a fitting and proper home for the Bowdoin. Here she will be seen by thousands of people every year. Here the name of the College will come to the eyes and ears of many people who might otherwise never know about it. Here people will see the Bowdoin and get to know something of the ship and her builder-skipper — rugged pioneers who explored and helped to open up a rugged geographic area.

The MacMillans were greeted at the pier by an official welcoming party immediately after the BOWDOIN tied up. This photograph shows part of the group. Admiral and Mrs. MacMillan are at the left, and Mr. Mallory, President of the Marine Historical Association, is to the right of the Admiral. Lieutenant Governor Dempsey is behind Mr. Mallory and in the center of the picture.

JUNE 27 was a cloudy, overcast day. Those who had come from near and far to watch the ceremonies were convinced that it would rain, but such was not the case. The weather held good, and as the day wore on, the sky began to clear. By a series of gentle progressions, the Bowdoin had proceeded from Falmouth on Cape Cod to Mystic, taking three days to make the trip. Despite the sad nautical disaster that placed the escorting Lord Jim (owned by the Commodore of the Boston Yacht Club) on the rocks, the trip was made in good order. Shortly after noon representatives of the press proceeded from the Seaport down the Mystic River to the bay near the little village of Noank. Here we met the Bowdoin and many of the numerous vessels which had gathered to escort her on this final run.

The Bowdoin was making way slowly, under much reduced engine speed. Her sails were bent on but had not been raised. She stood out among all the other sailing vessels in the group, not only by virtue of her unusual, sturdy lines, stubby masts, and special personality, but also by the fact that she was "undressed." All the other masted vessels were "dressed" — that is, each had an array of flags and bright-colored bunting streaming from mastheads, halliards, and stays. The sight was magnificent.

The ear was tickled, too. As one approached, he caught the swelling strains of bagpipe music wafting over the water, coming from the Manchester Pipe Band, aboard the motor sailer Manatuck. Shortly thereafter, martial music of the band of the 2nd Company of the Connecticut Governor's Footguard could be heard from the Nor'easter. And as the Bowdoin proceeded up the river, cannon were fired in salute and whistles were blown in tribute. Other vessels escorting the Bowdoin were the Terra Mar, with troops of the Governor's Footguard, and the Mystic Seaport's schooner Brilliant, carrying ten Girl Scout Mariners and ten Sea Explorer Scouts. There was also the schooner Neurone, skippered by its owner, Dr. Benjamin Whitcomb '30 of Hartford, Connecticut. And nearby, taking his family and guests for a close-up boat ride, was Robert Mason '50, whose craft displayed a large Bowdoin banner.

LED BY A 95-FOOT Coast Guard cutter, the nautical parade strung out and moved up the Mystic River from Noank, through the swinging railroad bridge, under the Mystic lift bridge and into the Mystic Seaport. Things were so arranged that members of the press, the Scottish pipe band, and the Governor's Footguards and their band could put ashore and be waiting at dockside for the dramatic moment when the Bowdoin would tie up. At about 3:30 the Bowdoin hove into view. Cannon salutes were fired and returned, and the Bowdoin swung gracefully toward the dock. The waiting crowd was a bit bemused by a temporary halt. A crossing of signals caused some confusion, and the Bowdoin was directed to the wrong side of a vertical spar and onto the gentle shelving of a sand bar. But in a few moments Cap'n Mac had all aboard go forward to shift weight, and a small tug pulled her off easily so that she was able to make the correct and proper entrance.

Answering to friendly calls and demands, Admiral and Mrs. MacMillan came to the fore deck of the Bowdoin, where they were photographed a hundred times over by forward-pressing photographers, official and unofficial. The interlude was brief, however, for the official coming-ashore ceremonies were about to begin. The MacMillans came down the gang-plank and to the head of the pier, where they were greeted and photographed, and then they and the official welcoming party drew near a radio microphone. The Honorable John Dempsey, Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut, greeted the MacMillans and read an official proclamation from Governor Ribicoff, designating June 27 as Bowdoin Day in Connecticut. Following this the Coast Guard Band played the National Anthem. Mr. Phillip Mallory, President of the Marine Historical Association, which operates Mystic Seaport, also welcomed the MacMillans. Then the band of the Governor's Footguards broke into a rousing version of "Rise, Sons of Bowdoin."

ADMIRAL MACMILLAN SPOKE briefly but warmly and from the heart. Among other things he said that he was highly pleased that the Bowdoin "is here in a great home." He seemed genuinely happy that his stout and sturdy vessel had reached a safe harbor. Mrs. MacMillan, called upon for a few words, was modest and brief and gave the Eskimo greetings to good friends.

At about four o'clock the official parade was formed. Led by the Governor's Footguards and Band, the Girl Sea Scouts, the Coast Guard Band, and the Manchester Pipers, the MacMillans, the Mallorys, Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Dempsey, and assorted dignitaries from the Third Naval District, the Town of Groton, the Mystic Seaport, and the State of Connecticut proceeded along the water-front road to the far end, the northern extremity of the Seaport settlement, to New York Yacht Club Station 10. This delightful, quaint bit of Victoriana, built in an architectural style reminiscent of Brunswick's First Parish Church and the Chase-Johnson house, was the location of a reception. Here some three or four hundred guests greeted Admiral and Mrs. MacMillan. The day was warm, the punch was cool, and the crowd was congenial and happy. But the activities of Bowdoin Day at Mystic were not yet completed.

Most of the guests left the reception by six o'clock, but at eight o'clock about 75 of them gathered again at the Seaport Manor, a nearby restaurant. Following an informal social hour, the company sat down to a delicious steak dinner. Mr. Mallory was master of ceremonies. Mr. E. Curtis Matthews '10 served as master of music. Telegrams of congratulation were read. Mr. Matthews played the harmonica and led the group in appropriate songs. And there was a toast to Admiral Mac and a presentation of a silver plaque to him for a life membership in the Marine Historical Association. In the course of the after-dinner program, Mr. Mallory introduced Dr. Charles Barbour '33, President of the Bowdoin Club of Connecticut, who presented to the Admiral a silver tray, especially inscribed for the occasion. President Coles brought greetings from the College. And Admiral MacMillan, in his generous reply to generous remarks, reminisced about many happy, interesting, and exciting times that he and the Bowdoin had had together. Mrs. MacMillan also spoke a few words of greeting and appreciation.

The warm words and the heart-felt toasts lingered pleasantly in the minds of those who had experienced them, but more important was the fact that the 88-foot Arctic schooner Bowdoin lay safely tied up along the dock at Mystic Seaport. In the years since 1921, in more than three hundred thousand miles of Arctic travel, she has carried the name of Bowdoin College to new geographic frontiers. That part of her job she did well. But she has another job to do, and that job she is doing well and will do well. Long after all of us are gone, she will be tied up at Mystic Seaport, reminding the American public of her dauntless skipper, the Arctic, and Bowdoin College. And perhaps, even more important than that, she will be stirring the minds and imaginations of generations of young Americans to dream dreams and think exciting thoughts of exploration.

The Record-Breaking 1958-59 Alumni Fund

The Story Of 4210 Alumni And $195,992.67

On August 5 President Coles wrote a letter to Vincent B. Welch '38, Chairman of the 1958-59 Alumni Fund, which raised nearly $196,000 from 4559 contributors. The total was almost $50,000 more than had been given in the previous year and was higher by $10,000 than the previous record of $155,246, set in 1956-57. In addition, the alumni participation mark of 54.6% — with 4210 men sharing — is the highest figure recorded since 1916-17's 56.2%.

This is the President's letter —

Mr. Vincent B. Welch
Welch, Mott, and Morgan
710 14th Street, N.W.
Washington 5, D.C.

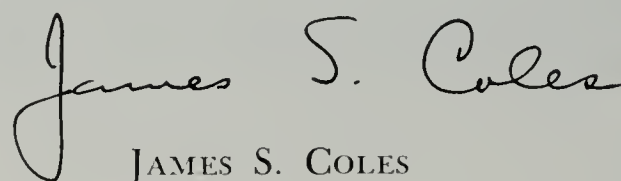

Dear Vincent:

The tremendous record of the 1958-59 Bowdoin Alumni Fund will long stand as an historic mark at the College. The goal of $160,000 was sufficient in itself, but your achievement in bringing this fund to a total of $195,992.67 sets a mark which will be difficult to surpass and which will present a challenge for several years.

The importance of the Alumni Fund, particularly in its contribution each year toward the current operating expenses of the College, could not possibly be overemphasized. In the year just ended, $106,212.64 was contributed by Bowdoin alumni to the Fund for this purpose. At the current rate of return on the endowed funds of the College, this is equivalent to $2,091,000 of added endowment. The College closed the year with a deficit of approximately $19,200, resulting from increased operating expenses and increases in faculty salaries. Had it not been for the Fund, that deficit would have been $125,000.

Truly, an alumnus contributing to the Alumni Fund is a part of a large living endowment of Bowdoin College. On behalf of the College, I congratulate you and thank you for the significant contribution you made as Chairman for the 1958-59 Fund, and extend sincere appreciation to all those who took part in this signal effort.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES S. COLES

The 154th Commencement

by PETER C. BARNARD '50

On Saturday, June 13, 186 more Bowdoin men were graduated by the College. In addition, Bowdoin conferred six honorary degrees, and the U. S. Army Reserve commissioned forty-five of the graduating seniors as second lieutenants. Many classes returned to the campus for reunions, official and unofficial. And happiness and sadness were reflected in a number of promotions, appointments, resignations, and retirements.

As usual, the first official Commencement activity was the traditional Baccalaureate Service, which took place in the First Parish Church on Sunday afternoon, June 7. President James S. Coles delivered the address, and Professor Norman L. Munn read the Scripture lesson. The Reverend Horace M. McMullen, new pastor of the First Parish Church, gave the invocation and the prayer. Professor Robert K. Beckwith led the choir, and Peter R. Perkins '53 played the organ.

On Thursday, June 11, alumni began returning for reunions. From two until five o'clock in the afternoon, the Class of 1934 held the traditional 25th Reunion Reception for faculty, staff, and friends at the Pickard Field House. Afterwards, members of the class adjourned to the Poland Spring House for a stag dinner.

FRIDAY'S ACTIVITIES

Friday was a busy day, crammed full of meetings and activities of all sorts. The Directors of the Alumni Fund met at nine o'clock in 108 Sills Hall, and the Alumni Council met at 10:30 in 107 Sills Hall. Professor Louis O. Coxé delivered the first of two Alumni Institute Lectures, on "American Literature Since World War II," at 9:30 a.m. in Smith Auditorium. The Society of Bowdoin Women held its annual meeting at Gibson Hall at ten o'clock. And the formal R.O.T.C. commissioning ceremonies were held outdoors, on the steps of the Walker Art Building, at 11:00 a.m. Major General Donald N. Yates, Commander of the Air Force Missile Test Center, including Cape Canaveral, in Florida, was the speaker at the exercises.

At noon on June 12 alumni gathered in the Arena for a delicious chicken barbecue luncheon, and the ladies enjoyed the same menu in the Gymnasium, under the auspices of the Society of Bowdoin Women. Retiring President of the Alumni Council Leland W. Hovey '26 presided at the Alumni Association Luncheon and introduced the speakers: President Coles, Vice President Bela W. Norton '18, Alumni Secretary Seward J.

Marsh '12, Fund Chairman Vincent B. Welch '38, and Council President-Elect Carleton S. Connor '36 — who then resigned, after a record short term of office, because he had just been elected an Overseer. (A hasty post-luncheon meeting of the Alumni Council was called to elevate Vice President William S. Piper jr. '31 to the Presidency.) Mr. Hovey introduced Richard S. Thayer '28, Fund Chairman for 1959-60, Samuel A. Ladd jr. '29, Fund Vice Chairman, and Glenn R. McIntire '25, Treasurer of the Alumni Council and the Alumni Association. In the course of his remarks Mr. Norton announced the names of the newly-elected Members-at-Large of the Council, Dr. Ralph T. Ogden '21, Vincent B. Welch '38, and Robert N. Bass '40, as well as the newly-appointed Directors of the Alumni Fund, Gorham H. Scott '29, Fergus Upham '38, and William K. Simon-ton '43.

At 1:30 Friday afternoon there was a dedication of a number of hawthorn trees near Coleman Hall. Sponsored by the Society of Bowdoin Women, this ceremony honored the memory of Mrs. Jane Coleman Pickard, widow of Frederick W. Pickard '94 and donor of Coleman Hall, who died on April 13.

At two o'clock Friday afternoon Professor Reinhard L. Korgen delivered the second Alumni Institute Lecture in Smith Auditorium. Taking as his subject "A Liberal Arts College and Arctic Exploration — A Paradox," he illustrated his remarks with color slides which he had taken on the last MacMillan expedition to the Arctic in 1954.

The Alpha Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa held its annual meeting in Smith Auditorium at 3:15. John L. Baxter '16 was re-elected President, Professor Samuel E. Kamerling was named Vice President, and Professor Nathan Dane, II '37 was elected to another term as Secretary-Treasurer. At the same hour annual alumni meetings were held in the chapter houses of the various fraternities.

President and Mrs. Coles held their Commencement Reception at the Moulton Union from four until five-thirty on Friday afternoon. Thereafter most of the reunion classes proceeded to their Friday outings and class dinners. As has been the case, more and more with each passing year, wives and children were very much in evidence at most of these gatherings. It seems safe to say that the Friday outings and dinners are fast becoming family affairs, as well as class affairs.

During the twilight hour, after eight o'clock, alumni and their families returned to the campus. At 8:45 many of them were in Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall for the beginning of the Commencement Play, Henry IV, Part I. The audience was enthusiastic about the Masque and Gown's annual Shakespearean production.

Commencement Day, Saturday, June 13, began with the formation of the Commencement Procession on the Class of 1895 Walk, in the center of the campus. Chandler's Band provided the music, as has long been the custom, and the procession got under way by 9:45. Air Force Colonel Benjamin A. Karsokas '39 was the Commencement Marshal, Professor George H. Quinby '23 was Faculty Marshal, Richard A. Wiley '49 served as Alumni Marshal, and Lawrence S. Wilkins was Senior Marshal. Nathan Dane, III, son of Nathan Dane, II '37 and grandson of Francis S. Dane '96, was the President's page. The parade marched to the First Parish Church, and there, at ten o'clock, the 154th Commencement exercises began.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

The Very Reverend Chester B. Emerson, '04, Dean Emeritus of Trinity Cathedral in Cleveland, Ohio, was the Commencement Chaplain. In this very same church he had been ordained a Congregational clergyman fifty years before, and now he was back, an Episcopal Dean, on the occasion of his fifty-fifth class reunion. Four seniors, in keeping with Bowdoin's ancient tradition, presented Commencement parts: R. Whitney Mitchell '58, G. Raymond Babineau, Peter N. Anastas jr., and David A. Kranes. Professor Robert K. Beckwith and the Chapel Choir provided the music. And President Coles, with the assistance of Dean Nathaniel C. Kendrick, conferred the degrees, 186 baccalaureate and six honorary.

Awarded honorary degrees were Major General Donald N. Yates, Commander of the Air Force Missile Test Center in Florida; Ellis O. Briggs, United States Ambassador to Greece; Fred C. Scribner jr., Under Secretary of the Treasury; John F. Thompson, former President of the International Nickel Company; Laurence Irving '16, Chief of the Physiology Section of the Arctic Health Research Center in Anchorage, Alaska; and Miss Phyllis C. Weston, instructor of mathematics at Skowhegan High School. The first four were created doctors of laws, the fifth was made a doctor of science, and Miss Weston received the master of arts degree.

Twenty-eight seniors took their degrees cum laude, twenty-five received Honors in their major subject, and four received High Honors. There were nine Distinguished Military Graduates. Three of the seniors, as well as five juniors, had been elected to Phi Beta Kappa the preceding afternoon. And one senior, Edward I. Garick, compiled a straight "A" record his final semester.

The conferring of degrees was followed by the benediction, "Rise, Sons of Bowdoin," "The Star-Spangled Banner," and the recessional march. The Commencement procession marched out of the Church, and, led by Colonel Karsokas and Chandler's Band, it proceeded down Maine Street to the Class of 1875 Gateway, up the Class of 1895 Walk, around the Chapel, past the Polar Bear, the Sargent Gymnasium, and the Curtis Pool, and to the Arena. Here at about twelve o'clock, the new graduates and their male guests, as well as hundreds of returning alumni, gathered for the traditional Commencement Dinner. (Simultaneously, the Society of Bowdoin Women held a Luncheon for the Ladies in the Gymnasium.) The Invocation was pronounced by the Reverend Herbert B. Cousins '54, and all then joined in singing the College Hymn, led by the Precentor, Allen F. Hetherington '54.

Alumni Fund Chairman Vincent B. Welch '38 reports a record-breaking Fund of $183,000. By June 30 it had reached $195,992.-67.

President Coles began the after-dinner program by welcoming everyone to the Commencement Dinner and by introducing the dignitaries at the Head Table: Chester G. Abbott '13, President of the Board of Overseers; Sanford B. Cousins '20 and Benjamin R. Shute '31, newly-elected Trustees; Carleton S. Connor '36, newly-elected Overseer; Charles W. Allen '34, Treasurer of the College since February; Dr. Laurence Irving '16 (who was sitting with his classmates and not at the Head Table); Dr. John Thompson; Ambassador Ellis Briggs; the Honorable Fred Scribner jr.; and Major General Donald Yates. The sixth honorary degree recipient, Miss Phyllis Weston, was dining with the Society of Bowdoin Women. Next he presented the Honorable Robert B. Williamson, Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, who spoke for the State.

Following this the President paid tribute to members of the Bowdoin family who had died within the past year: three Trustees, Hoyt A. Moore '95, William W. Lawrence '98, and Roland E. Clark '01; Charles H. Mergendahl, Lecturer in Mathematics from 1955 to 1958; and George W. Higgins, head of the Carpenter Shop for thirty-four years and a member of the College Staff for more than fifty years. He then announced the names of the new Members-at-Large of the Alumni Council and the new Directors of the Alumni Fund, as well as the officers which each group had elected the preceding day. Modifying tradition somewhat, in the interest of time and brevity, President Coles listed the men celebrating their "reunion years" who had served on the faculty and staff for 20 years or more: Professor Noel C. Little '17 (40 years); Assistant Bursar William K. Hall '22 (35 years); Professor Fritz C. A. Koelln (30 years); Professors Samuel E. Kamerling, George H. Quinby '23, and Philip M. Brown (25 years each); and Professor Thomas A. Riley '28 (20 years). The President also announced that the redoubtable John J. "Jack" Magee, now emeritus, had become track coach 45 years before, in 1914.

A particularly heartwarming part of the ceremonies occurred when George L. Blanchard, for many years Chief Engineer at the College Heating Station and a member of the staff since 1909, was called to the platform and escorted there by his son, Harland E. Blanchard '32. President Coles read and presented to him a special certificate in recognition of his fifty years of loyal service to the College.

FACULTY CHANGES

Next came a list of promotions, appointments, retirements, leaves, and resignations. Promoted to Professor of English was Dr. Lawrence S. Hall '36. Promoted from Instructor to Assistant Professor were William D. Shipman in Economics, Dr. John E. Frey in Chemistry, Dr. Gerard J. Brault in French, and Stuart E. Colie in Government. Dr. Carl N. Schmalz was promoted from Curator of the Art Collections to Assistant Director of the Museum of Fine Arts. Wolcott A. Hokanson jr. '50 has been promoted from Assistant Bursar to Bursar, which position Glenn R. McIntire '25 relinquishes to devote full time to his duties as Assistant Treasurer. Dr. Edward C. Kirkland, Frank Munsey Professor of History since 1931 and on leave since 1955, has retired as Professor Emeritus. Seward J. Marsh '12, "... after seventeen years of able leadership and service as Alumni Secretary . . . during which the Alumni Fund has grown from $23,577 in 1941 to $155,246 in 1957 . . . the alumni body has increased from 5,200 to 8,000, and the activities of the Alumni Council and the Association have increased steadily," also retired.

President Coles announced the appointment of two senior members of the Faculty to endowed professorships. Dean Nathaniel C. Kendrick has been named Frank Munsey Professor of History. Dr. Ernst Helmreich has been appointed Thomas Brackett Reed Professor of History and Political Science.

Faculty members who will be on sabbatical leave next year are Professor Philip C. Beam; Professor Norman L. Munn; Professor Alton H. Gustafson, who will be working on a National Shown here, from left to right, are three Alumni Council Presidents. William S. Piper, Jr. '31 was elected Vice President on Friday morning but was elevated to the presidency two hours later. Carleton S. Connor '36 served for those two hours as President before resigning to become an Overseer. Leland W. Hovey '26 retired as President after his regular one-year term.

Science Foundation Fellowship at the University of California; Professor Louis O. Coxe, who will lecture at Trinity College in Dublin, Ireland, on an Educational Exchange Grant; and Associate Professor Jeffrey J. Carre '40, who will be studying in France. Associate Professor James A. Storer is on a leave of absence, to do work under a Fulbright grant at the Institute of Economic Research and Development at the University of the Philippines. Also on leave for the coming year, for further study, are Assistant Professor Leighton van Nort and Peter Batchelder, Instructor in German.

Four resignations from the Faculty were announced. Dr. Robert H. Ivy jr., Assistant Professor of Romance Languages, leaves to become Associate Professor of Romance Languages at Northwestern University. Dr. David L. Russell, Assistant Professor of Psychology and Director of Student Counseling, has accepted appointment as Associate Professor of Psychology at Ohio University.

Temple University has called Dr. Edwin B. Benjamin '37, Assistant Professor of English, to become Associate Professor of English. And Peter H. Amann, Instructor in History, has resigned to become Assistant Professor of History at Michigan State University-Oakland.

President Coles announced changes in the Army personnel of the Bowdoin R.O.T.C. unit. Lieutenant Colonel Louis P. McCuller, for two years Professor of Military Science and Tactics, leaves for a new assignment in Germany, to be replaced by Lieutenant Colonel Edward A. Ryan. Captains Herbert H. Flather jr. and Harvey B. Johns jr. are also being replaced as they, too, have been assigned new duties in Germany. It was at this point that the President called Major Lester B. Goldberg, USAF, Commanding Officer of the 654th Radar Squadron at the Brunswick Naval Air Station, to the platform. He was attending his fourth consecutive Bowdoin Commencement, in recognition of which President Coles presented him a special letter of congratulation "in lieu of a diploma."

Announcement was made that David Kranes had won the Goodwin Commencement Prize. Senior Class President and 1958 Varsity Football Captain Eugene A. Waters was called forward to receive the Andrew Allison Haldane Cup, awarded each year at Commencement "to a member of the senior class who has outstanding qualities of leadership and character." "To an exceptional degree," the President said, "Waters has exemplified the characteristics which those who remember him associate with Andy Haldane."

Retiring Alumni Council President Leiland W. Hovey was then asked to make the annual presentation of the Alumni Service Award. The secret had been well kept. All those who were watching him saw the look of complete surprise which came over the face of S. Sewall Webster '10 when his name was read. A warm round of applause greeted Mr. Webster as he went to the platform and received the certificate and engraved pewter plate from Mr. Hovey.

An anonymous donor has established the Paul Nixon Basketball Trophy, to be inscribed each year with the name of the varsity basketball player who has made "the most valuable contribution to his team through his qualities of leadership and sportsmanship." President Coles announced that Richard C. Willey jr. '59 is the first recipient of the award.

Another new trophy, to be known as the Winslow R. Howland Football Trophy, has been presented to the College by friends of the late Winslow Howland '29, who was captain of the football and hockey teams his senior year. The award will be made at the Football Banquet each year to "the member of the varsity football team who has made the most marked improvement on the field of play during the football season and who has shown the qualities of co-operation, aggressiveness, enthusiasm for the game, and fine sportsmanship so characteristic of Winslow Howland."

Talking distinctly but at a good pace,

Richard Davis reported that 1934 was making an unrestricted gift of $15,140 for whatever use the College deemed appropriate.

the President proceeded to further comments and announcements. He told about the four Summer Institutes, sponsored by the National Science Foundation. He mentioned the Speech Workshop for Teachers at The Oakes Center, Bar Harbor, for a second summer under the direction of Professor Albert R. Thayer '22. And he spoke of three special non-credit summer seminars in the novel, contemporary art, and symphonic and choral music to be conducted, respectively, by Professors Lawrence Hall, Philip Beam, and Robert Beckwith. Professor A. LeRoy Greason has been serving as Coordinator for Summer Programs. President Coles also spoke of the Brunswick Summer Playhouse, which began a series of nine musical productions in the Pickard Theater on June 29.

BOWDOIN'S BIGGEST FUND

The Honorable Ellis O. Briggs, Ambassador to Greece, was introduced to speak for the honorary graduates. Next President Coles called upon Vincent B. Welch '38, Chairman of the 1958-59 Alumni Fund. Approaching the platform to the time of festive band music (playfully rigged by some of his cohorts) and accompanied by a serio-comic phalanx of his classmates, Mr. Welch marched briskly forward. His vigorous report gladdened the hearts of all who heard it. Having passed the goal of $160,000, the Fund then stood at $183,000, and Mr. Welch was in hopes that it would pass $200,000 by the end of the Fund year. In cogent and uncomplicated terms he urged all alumni and friends of the College to apply themselves (and their purses) to the greatest possible climax of this already-record-breaking Fund. (Eventually the total was almost $196,000, a handsome record and a fine tribute to the hard work and devotion of the Chairman, the Directors, the Class Agents, and the others who labored so diligently for success!) "A report like that and a fine record of contributions to the Alumni Fund deserve the recognition which can be given only by singing 'Phi Chi'," the President said. So we sang to the music of Chandler's Band, under the leadership of Precentor Hetherington.

The Class of 1916 has presented a bowl, to be awarded each year to the class whose record in support of the Alumni Fund shows the greatest improvement over the class's performance of the previous year. This will be presented each year at the fall conference of Fund Directors and Agents.

President Coles then called on Richard H. Davis '34, Twenty-fifth Reunion Chairman, who announced his class's unrestricted gift of $15,140 for whatever use the College deemed appropriate. The Honorable Harold H. Burton '09, President of his Class, came to the platform next to announce that the Class of 1909 was making a gift of more than $13,000 for the purchase and installation of a pipe organ in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall.

The establishment of the Copeland-Gross Biology Prize, honoring Professors Emeriti Manton Copeland and Alfred O. Gross H'52, was also announced. Created by the Department of Biology, the award will be made annually, beginning with the next Commencement, "to the graduating senior who has best exemplified the idea of a liberal education during the major program in biology."

President Coles proceeded to further announcements: the institution of an Undergraduate Research Participant Program, as well as the establishment of the Shumway Scholarship Fund (honoring the late Sherman N. Shumway '17), the Kaemmerling Scholarship and Loan Fund, the Zimbalist Fund for Music Scores, the Danforth Foundation Faculty Summer Study Grants, and the Melvin T. Copeland Fund (established by Professor Copeland '06), the use of which is to be determined later. The President also reported on admissions, including in his remarks some of the facts about the Class of 1963 contained elsewhere in this issue.

Time ran out, but true to his promise, President Coles closed the 154th Commencement Dinner at three o'clock sharp. Those present sang "Rise, Sons of Bowdoin" and then drifted out of the Arena. Although the President was unable to deliver his prepared report on the State of the College, alumni will be pleased to know that many of his interesting and important remarks are contained in the President's Report for 1958-59, which appeared later in the summer. With mixed feelings of happiness and sadness, alumni, new graduates, families, and friends gradually left the campus. Many of them were delighted, however, to be able to hear the transcription of Professor Herbert R. Brown's lively Commencement commentary, which was again carried by Radio Station WGAN, beginning at 4:00 p.m.

1934 QUESTIONNAIRE

Twenty-nine members of 1934 returned a brief questionnaire last spring, the results of which were tabulated by Reunion Chairman Richard H. Davis of Framingham, Mass. Some of the results are listed below.

Only one of the 29 is not married. Twenty-five of the 28 who are married have a total of 62 children, ranging in age from three months to 21 years. Twenty-seven men either own their home or are buying it. Many of them have two cars.

Most of the 28 have remained with the same company throughout their career. Three earn between $5,000 and $7,500, seven between $7,500 and $10,000, five between $10,000 and $12,500, three between $12,500 and $15,000, three between $15,000 and $20,000, three between $20,000 and $25,000, and four, more than $25,000. One man did not answer this question.

day Luncheon, Mrs. Thomas P. Riley; and Chairman of the Saturday Luncheon, Mrs. Perley S. Turner.

Two special exhibits were featured at Commencement time. One was a collection pertaining to Admiral Robert E. Peary of the Class of 1877, loaned to the College by his daughter, Mrs. Edward (Marie Peary) Stafford H'49, and displayed at Hubbard Hall to mark the fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of the North Pole in 1909. The other exhibition, displayed partly at the Museum of Fine Arts and partly at the Library, was of material relating to the Bowdoin family. Gathered and organized by Dr. Gerard J. Brault, it included silver objects, several autographs of Governor James Bowdoin, and holograph letters of George Washington and Benjamin Franklin to Governor Bowdoin.

Mrs. John (Peg) Stanwood, since 1950 secretary to Director of Athletics Malcolm E. Morrell '24, was elected an honorary member of the Class of 1924 in recognition of her services to both the class and the College during the past nine years. At the 1924 family dinner on Friday she was presented a Bowdoin chair and a handsome pocketbook.

George W. Burpee '04, Trustee since 1952, resigned and was elected Trustee Emeritus, and his classmate Dr. Chester B. Emerson '04, an Overseer since 1924, also resigned, to be elected Overseer Emeritus.

The citation for the 1959 Alumni

Service Award read as follows: "To S. SEWALL WEBSTER of the Class of 1910, the best Class Agent any Alumni Fund ever had; as an undergraduate 50 short years ago a melodious singer for the Glee Club and the Chapel Choir and now an even more melodious singer for Bowdoin; modest winner of the Alumni Fund Cup four times in his five years as Agent (although he has, with characteristic generosity, declined to be in the competition the past two years) and genial inducer of 100% participation by his classmates; warm, friendly, and thoughtful alumnus who has traveled thousands of miles in visiting every member of 1910; husband of a lovely Wheaton lady and father of two Bowdoin sons; loyal and eager spectator at some 90 consecutive Bowdoin football games, both at home and away — to Sewall Webster, in grateful recognition of years of devoted service, always cheerfully rendered, his fellow alumni today give their Alumni Service Award."

Five graduating seniors and six alumni were awarded graduate scholarships in June. Cameron D. Bailey '58 received a Charles Carroll Everett Scholarship to continue his studies in the master of arts in teaching program at Wesleyan University. R. Whitney Mitchell '58 also received an Everett grant to begin graduate work in French at Yale University. Edward I. Garick '59 received the Henry W. Longfellow Graduate Scholarship to do work at Yale in classics as a Woodrow Wilson Fellow. Richard G. Briggs '59 was awarded the Galen C. Moses Scholarship to begin graduate work in biology this fall at Cornell, where he will also be a teaching assistant. Robert Y. Tow '59 and Frederick S. Smith '59 both received grants from the Guy Charles Howard Scholarship Fund, the former to study philosophy at Columbia and the latter to do summer work in German at Middlebury, followed by study at the University of Mainz, Germany. Five awards were made from the O'Brien Graduate Scholarship Fund: to Raymond G. Biggar '52, who is studying for the doctorate in English at the University of Wisconsin; to Paul J. Morin '54, who continues his study of the classics next year at Ohio State University; to W. Pattangall Nicolet '53, who is studying English at Brown, where he will also be an assistant in English; to Allan D. Wooley jr. '58, who is doing work in classics at Princeton; and to Wayne M. Wright '56, a doctoral candidate in physics at Harvard.

The eleven graduate scholarships awarded for the coming year amount to a total of $4,450.

When Carleton S. Connor resigned as President of the Alumni Council to become an Overseer, Donald N. Lukens '46 was elected to complete his term of office as Member-at-Large.

Bernard Greely, pictured here at the Dinner, has played at every Commencement since 1893, when Chandler's Band was first hired for that purpose.

On The Campus

Bowdoin's new football coaching staff gathered on August 10 to begin work on plans for the season. Head Coach Nels Corey '39, appointed last fall to replace Adam Walsh, has two new assistants in Sid Watson and Pete Kostacopoulos. Watson, who played in the Washington Redskins' backfield a year ago, is also varsity hockey coach. Kostacopoulos was appointed to the Polar Bear coaching staff in July. He played under Corey at Maine Central Institute as a center. At the University of Maine he played both center and quarterback and was selected to the All-Maine team in both football and basketball. Since his graduation from Maine in 1957 he had coached at Deering High School.

For the first time in history Bowdoin will have three full-time football coaches. In addition, freshman coaches Ed Coombs and Bob Donham will assist with the varsity until college opens and the yearling squad reports.

Another help will be the return of a training table, missing for some years. This will enable men with afternoon laboratories to be present for late afternoon practice sessions.

Funds have also been provided for installation of adequate lighting equipment at Pickard Field since much of the practice, once the season begins, must be carried on under lights.

Between 45 and 50 varsity candidates are expected to begin practice on September 1. Included are 17 lettermen and 22 sophomores. Perhaps the best new prospect is Ted Gardner of Sanford, a junior, who transferred from Notre Dame following his freshman year and was consequently ineligible for the 1958 season. He hits hard and has pretty good speed.

Seven of the 17 lettermen are backs, including co-captain Bob Hawkes, Danvers, Mass.; Jack Condon, Brockton, Mass.; Jack Cummings, Ithaca, N. Y.; George Entin, Coconut Grove, Fla.; Bob Kennedy, Reading, Mass.; Dick Seavey, Canton, Mass.; and Terry Sheehan, Gardiner.

Sophomore backs who will be competing for positions are Dan Alvino, South Deerfield, Mass.; Fred Field, West Barnstable, Mass.; Pete Mone, East Douglas, Mass.; Mike Panteleakos, Saco; Jack Robarts, Marblehead, Mass.; Glenn Saunders, North Conway, N. H.

In the line the ten returning lettermen are co-captain and guard Joe Carven, end Charlie Finlayson, and tackle Gerry Haviland, all from Weymouth, Mass.; tackles Dave Cole of Lexington, Mass., and Bob Needham of Needham, Mass.; guards Bob Hohlfelder of Freeport, N. Y., and Don Prince of Framingham, Mass.; center Carl Smith of Melrose, Mass.; and ends Phil Very of Warwick, R. I., and Bill Widmer of Philadelphia, Pa.

Sophomores counted on for help in the line are guards Joe Augustini, Natick, Mass.; Bill Cunningham, Paxton, Mass.; Charlie Speleotis, Peabody, Mass.; Frank DiGirolamo, Roxbury, Mass.; Mike Farmer, Malden, Mass.; and Ed Evans, Montreal, Canada; tackles Craig Cleaves, Darien, Conn.; Arthur DeMelle, Natick, Mass.; Howard Hall, Lowell, Mass.; and John Tolan, Peaks Island; and ends Jack Adams, Dixfield; Dave Barron, Chelsea, Mass.; and Skip Magee of Manasquan, N. J. Dave Fernald of Pittsfield and Jim Garland of Conway, N. H., will work with Smith in the center spot.

Nels Corey may feel something like a patriarch in his new position and with his new assistants. Although Nels himself is only 44, Sid Watson is only 27 and Pete Kostacopoulos but 25.

A Happy Memory

Mrs. Jane Coleman Pickard of Greenville, Del., donor of Coleman Hall and widow of the late Frederick W. Pickard '94, died on April 13 at the age of 85. In the words of President Coles, "The news of Mrs. Pickard's death brings sorrow to us at the College and to Bow-doin men everywhere. She was a wonderful and vital person, and her life was filled with thought for others."

It was in 1899 that Jane Alice Coleman was married to Frederick William Pickard, who served for more than 25 years as a member of Bowdoin's Governing Boards. His benefactions provided the Pickard Athletic Field and its endowment, the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall, the Charles Weston Pickard Professorships of Chemistry, and the Pickard Book Fund for the Library. He also supported a program of teaching fellowships in modern languages and contributed generously to the Sesquicentennial Fund. With Mrs. Pickard, he gave the Pickard Field House in 1937.

Mrs. Pickard contributed generously to the fund for the Arena and through the Society of Bowdoin Women gave the College a complete silver service embossed with the college seal.

In September of 1957 she gave Bowdoin some $450,000 with which to construct and equip a new dormitory for 76 students. The dormitory, completed in the spring of 1958 and dedicated at Commencement that year, is named Coleman Hall, in recognition of her family.

Mrs. Pickard's gift of Coleman Hall brought the total of Pickard family gifts to Bowdoin to more than 1½ million dollars.

The hundreds of students who will be fortunate enough to room in Coleman Hall in the years to come will always be grateful to Mrs. Pickard, who nearly two years ago wrote these words, inscribed on a piece of ceramic tile in that dormitory—

That the boys who live
In this house will Have a happy memory
Of it all their lives

JANE COLEMAN PICKARD

Hanley Olympic Doctor

Dr. Daniel F. Hanley '39 will be one of the two doctors who will serve as the medical staff for the United States Olympic team when it competes at Rome, Italy, from August 25 to September 11, 1960.

Dr. Hanley has been College Physician at Bowdoin for the past 12 years. He is also Director of the Maine Medical Association, made up of some 800 members, and is a member of the staff at the Mercy Hospital in Portland and the Bath Memorial Hospital.

Following his graduation from Bowdoin in 1939, he received his M.D. degree from Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1943 and interned at Boston City Hospital. During World War II he was a major in the United States Army Medical Corps and saw service in the China-Burma-India Theater.

Dr. Hanley, who is also editor of the Maine Medical Journal, has conducted clinics on athletic injuries both at Bowdoin and at the Maine Medical Center in Portland. He feels that the present long cleat in the football shoe is the cause of many unnecessary leg injuries that may lead to infections. It would be simple, he thinks, to design a cleat that would avoid practically all such injuries.

He also insists that all Bowdoin football players wear suspension helmets that will absorb the shock of a hard blow — in other words, the head and the helmet never come into direct contact.

In recent years Dr. Hanley has headed a movement to attract doctors to the rural areas of Maine.

Mathematics Institute

Bowdoin has received a grant of $9,450 from the National Science Foundation to support an In-Service Institute on mathematics for secondary school teachers, beginning in October. Under the program approximately 30 mathematics teachers in Maine secondary schools will meet at the College once a week over a period of thirty weeks, with all expenses paid. Those completing the course may receive credit at the graduate level.

The In-Service Institute will begin on October 5 and close in June of 1960. The instruction will be shared by members of the mathematics department, including Professors Edward S. Hammond, Cecil T. Holmes, Reinhard L. Korgen, Dan E. Christie '37, and Richard L. Chittim '41. Professor Chittim is the Director of the Institute.

The program of studies includes the following topics: new ideas in geometry, elementary logic, elementary mathematics of statistics, modern views of algebra, and determinants and matrices. During the Institute proposed revisions of secondary school mathematics curricula will also be discussed.

Pickard Theater Gets Used

In his annual report on the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall, Professor of Dramatics George H. Quinby '23 pointed out that during the year 1958-59 the theater was booked for 45 dates. Included were 15 plays, 15 lectures, seven concerts, and eight special events. In addition, rehearsals for plays, concerts, or other events took place almost daily from the start to the close of the college year.

The theater was also used this year by WBOR to record Meddiebempster songs, since, in Professor Quinby's words, it is "superior to either the radio studio or the Music Building acoustically."

Seventy-four students took part in the activities of the Masque and Gown, as actors, playwrights, musicians, or production workers. In addition, 40 faculty people, including wives and children, shared in the production of The Misanthrope last spring.

Coxe to Ireland

Louis O. Coxe, Pierce Professor of English, will lecture on American literature at Trinity College, Dublin, Ireland, during the 1959-60 academic year under an Educational Exchange Grant.

The grant to Professor Coxe was made under the provisions of an agreement signed March 16, 1957, between the governments of the United States and Ireland. He was selected by the Scholarship Exchange Board in Dublin, in cooperation with the United States Board of Foreign Scholarships and the Department of State.

Professor Coxe, who succeeded the late Robert P. T. Coffin '15 at Bowdoin, is a native of Manchester, N. H., and a 1940 graduate of Princeton. He was an officer in the United States Navy for four years during World War II and taught at the Lawrenceville School in New Jersey and at Harvard College before accepting an appointment as assistant professor of English at the University of Minnesota in 1949. Six years later he joined the Bowdoin faculty.

He is co-author of the play Billy Budd, which opened at the Biltmore Theatre in New York in February of 1951. An adaptation for the stage of Herman Melville's 19th century novel, the play won both the Donaldson and the Outer Circle drama awards.

Professor Coxe, who was a Sewanee Review Fellow in Poetry for 1955-56, has written three volumes of poetry. At Bowdoin he teaches courses in English literature and literary composition.

O'Neil Tallman Professor

William M. O'Neil of Sydney, Australia, has been appointed Visiting Professor of the Philosophy of Science on the Tallman Foundation for the second semester of the academic year 1959-60.

The 26th in the series of Tallman lecturers at Bowdoin, Professor O'Neil is chairman of the Department of Psychology at the University of Sydney, where he has been a member of the faculty since 1945.

A native of Sydney and a graduate of the University of Sydney, he previously taught at Sydney Teachers' College and Sydney Technical College. He also served for four years as psychologist-in-charge of the vocational guidance bureau of the Department of Labour in New South Wales.

Professor O'Neil is the author of Method in Psychology and has written some 20 articles in Australian, American, and British psychological and philosophical journals. He is married to the former Kathleen Ferris of Sydney, who is also a graduate of the University of Sydney, and they have 16-year-old twins, Judith and James.

Professor O'Neil's appointment is made possible by a fund of $100,000 given in 1928 by the late Frank G. Tallman of Wilmington, Del., as a memorial to the Bowdoin members of his family. In addition to offering a course for undergraduates, the Tallman professor gives a series of public lectures.

Two New Emeriti

At the June meetings of the Governing Boards two members of the Class of 1904 resigned, following long years of faithful and devoted service. George W. Burpee, who was elected to the Overseers in 1945 and to the Trustees in 1952, is now Trustee Emeritus, and Chester B. Emerson, who was elected to the Overseers in 1924, has become Overseer Emeritus.

In submitting his letter of resignation to President Coles, Mr. Burpee said, "I greatly appreciate the honor and privilege of having served the College as a member of the Governing Boards. The associations with the members of the College Administration, the Faculty, and fellow members of the Boards have been among the happiest experiences of my life. I shall always treasure them in memory.

"My interest in the College and everything connected with it will continue to be as lively as ever, and you all will have my best wishes through the coming years."

In his letter of resignation, addressed to Chester G. Abbott '13, President of the Board of Overseers, Dr. Emerson wrote, "It is difficult for me either to think or feel that this year is my fifty-fifth since graduation in 1904 and my thirty-fifth on the Board.

"Yesterday I listened intently to a most intelligent and serious debate between much younger and abler men on a perplexing question involving the welfare of the College. I said to myself, 'It is time to yield your place to a younger and wiser man.'

"So, I herewith present my resignation as a member of the Board.

"Thanks for the courtesy of the years! Hail to the living and to the dead who in the past have given their devotion to the College. God bless the men who today give their time and talents to its service. Of the past, great memories; for the future, great dedication. Bowdoin beata!"

These letters are printed here as an illustration — without further elaboration or embellishment, for they need none — of the devotion which inspires Bowdoin men to serve their college.

Senior Placement

"The help-wanted signs were for the most part prominently displayed for the 1959 college senior," according to the annual report of Placement Director Samuel A. Ladd, Jr. '29.

"After a year of mild recession, this year's graduates experienced more offers at new salary peaks," Mr. Ladd said. "The salary range for most Bowdoin graduates was between $4200 and $5800, with the average around $4900. There was a upsurge in the fields of electronics, insurance, banking, retailing, and the utility business. Sales and production opportunities were also numerous, but there were fewer jobs available in the oil and chemical fields.

"It seems obvious that industry seeking potential young executives likes the liberal arts training. Bowdoin graduates were favorably considered for training in both technical and non-technical fields," he concluded.

More than 1360 individual interviews were arranged during the course of the year by the Placement Bureau. The average senior experienced approximately 15 company interviews from September to May. A total of 112 firms visited the Bureau, including most of the top ten national advertisers as well as many medium-sized companies.

were mailed to alumni of known address from the Athletic Office early in September.

ALUMNI DAY

OCTOBER 31, 1959

Applications for the Alumni Day Luncheon on the day of the game with Bates accompanied the applications for football tickets. Please remember that the College provides luncheon only for those who purchase tickets in advance.

Following the game with Bates on Alumni Day there will be an informal gathering in the Moulton Union as in recent years. All are invited to attend and to wear their game clothes.

A Message to All Alumni from Alumni Council President WILLIAM S. PIPER, JR. '31

I wonder how many Bowdoin alumni are in the same boat that I was in at the time I was elected to the Alumni Council in 1957? Blissful in my ignorance, I came back to the College that fall and began to learn what the Alumni Council is and what its duties and responsibilities are. Now that I have been catapulted into the Council Presidency, I am more aware than ever of the importance of the Council and its work. I am taking this opportunity, therefore, to remind all Bowdoin men about the Council and what it does.

There are presently more than 8,000 living Bowdoin alumni, including graduates, non-graduates, Medical School alumni, and honorary graduates. All of them comprise the Bowdoin College Alumni Association. The Alumni Council is composed of the elected representatives of the Alumni, and the officers of the Council are ex officio the officers of the Alumni Association. The Council, organized in 1914 and altered somewhat over the intervening years, is now made up of twelve Members at Large, representatives of the thirty-eight recognized Bowdoin clubs, the Alumni Secretary, the Chairman of the Directors of the Alumni Fund, the Faculty representative, and the Treasurer. The Council is truly a representative group because each year the Alumni elect three of the Members at Large on the Alumni Ballot, and the thirty-eight Club Members come to the Council as elected representatives of their respective groups.

The Council represents the Alumni and serves as an intermediary agency between the Alumni and the College. It does much of its work through committees, but ultimately any committee's recommendations must receive the approval of the Council. The Council committees make constant studies of various aspects of the College. Through personal alumni contacts and club representation, the Council keeps the Alumni informed and in turn is for the College a sounding board of Alumni feeling. Among other things, the Council has been instrumental in starting or promoting the Alumni Fund, the office of Alumni Secretary, the Placement Bureau, a regular and separate Admissions Office, the publication of the Bowdoin Alumnus, and the issuing of an alumni directory at regular intervals.

Is the Council important? In answering this question, we should bear in mind that Bowdoin College was founded by a small group of men who felt the need for a college of liberal arts and who were willing to furnish the time and money necessary to found it and to assure its continuation. Such an institution consists of people and ideas. This was true in the beginning, and it is still true today. Over the years the Alumni have become a strong guiding force behind the College. They are the people who have assured the continuation of the traditions of the past, they have made possible the modifications required by the present, and they will continue to nurture these principles for the future good of the nation and of the world. The Council is the heart of the Alumni.

Our various educational systems are the strength and backbone of America, so it becomes the primary interest of all concerned to participate actively. Especially, it behooves every Bowdoin alumnus, having enjoyed the benefits of the work and generosity of those who have gone before, to work to assure the continuation of a Bowdoin education for the generations yet to come.

WILLIAM S. PIPER, JR. '31,

President of the Bowdoin Alumni Council.

Books

HODDING CARTER, The Angry Scar: Doubleday and Company, Inc., New York, 1959; pp. 425; $5.95.

Hodding Carter, editor and Southern liberal, in the acknowledgments for his The Angry Scar, calls himself an "unscholarly poacher" on the writings of others to which he is indebted for his interpretation of the Reconstruction period in the South. With no hesitation, this "unscholarly" reviewer would like to commend the poacher for knowing where the fattest game roosted and for combining the choice captives into a highly palatable dish, seasoned by his own taste.

The subject of The Angry Scar is not palatable, either to the North or to the South. From diaries, letters, newspaper accounts, and recorded interviews, as well as from thoughtful historical evaluations by others, Hodding Carter has produced a narrative history of the decade and a half following the American Civil War which stresses the social, political, and economic aspects of the period on both sides of the Mason-Dixon line. More than anything else, this book evaluates both inflictors of the wound, and shows what prevented the good intentions of each side being understood by the other. "The legend of Yankee chicanery in the South and of unrelenting Southern hostility to all Yankee interlopers simply does not hold water," he says, and The Angry Scar implements this thesis.

What economists, political historians, or sociologists might say about this "interpretive thesis" might be quite different from the impressions made on a casual reader. Certain sections of the book are as exciting as a novel. The impeachment proceedings against Andrew Johnson, the account of Albert Morgan, carpetbagger, the story of the Hayes-Tilden swap, and other incidents are all told with dramatic narrative skill by Hodding Carter. He has, as well, a fine touch for characterization and a tolerant sympathy for human beings. He draws a picture of "the middle-aged and older Southerner — the son or grandson of Confederate and Redeemer," too long to quote here, which, with kindness and some humor, portrays a human being as well as sums up "the cultural, political, economic and moral legacies of Reconstruction."

The casual reader might find the book too long, 409 pages, and somewhat diffuse and repetitious if it were not relieved by the above-mentioned examples of dramatic skill and characterization. The stylistic device of departing from a chronological framework and handling issues or institutions comprehensively, while a justifiable approach, makes for confusion in the mind of the reader, or at least of the undisciplined reader.

Of particular interest to Bowdoin readers will be what Hodding Carter has to say about General Oliver Otis Howard, Bowdoin 1850. "At another time and under different circumstances the most fervid Southerners could have liked the kindly, one-armed man from Maine . . . but it was his lot that his name would become synonymous with . . . the Freedmen's Bureau, the nation's first welfare agency, an organization conceived in human concern, nurtured on ineptitude and political manipulation, and destined to die of material and spiritual corruption; and so he became anathema to the South." In a brief résumé of his career prior to 1865 are mentioned his graduation from West Point in 1851, fourth in his class; his military service, which was generally good although at Gettysburg, where "his personal courage was marked, his indecisiveness as a commander contributed to the Union defeat in the first day's battle." Howard was "a deeply religious, humanitarian and well-intentioned man, but . . . unfortunately for the South and the nation, General Howard's military and personal virtues were overshadowed by his weaknesses as commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau . . . The pious man whom the Union had admired as "The Christian Soldier" was a poor executive, a naive, too-trusting administrator in an agency which would become uncommonly tainted by fraud, inefficiency, and gross political misconduct." Howard was the object of serious charges in Congress in 1870 and 1874 but was exonerated by a congressional committee. The work of the Freedmen's Bureau for the education of the Negro was a primary concern of General Howard, and his name was given to the university for Negroes in Washington, for which he was instrumental in obtaining a site and sufficient money for financing the enlarged university.

The subject of education generally in the Reconstruction period is of great interest in The Angry Scar. Excerpts from the diaries of northern schoolmarm who went south to establish and teach in schools for both whites and blacks reveal not only the difficulties of their pioneering work but also the missionary zeal of themselves and their northern sponsoring groups. The author of The Angry Scar points out that "the South in its bitterness and the North in its disinterest" are forgetful of the benefits resulting from Reconstruction. Among these benefits he gives first place to education. "The Carpetbag administrations did assure free school systems to both races, the first to be provided not only for Negroes but for many of the whites. Their record in public school expansion was, in general, and despite accompanying corruption, better than were the performances of the Redemptionist administrations which followed Reconstruction . . . and the public educational achievements of the prewar South where the novel idea of free, mass education had not caught on."

This book is not just an interesting treatment of an unsavory slice of American history, however. It has a timely message and, if read carefully, a warning.

" . . . the memory of the Reconstruction endures meaningfully among nearly thirty million white Americans in the South and, to a considerably less extent, among the ten million Southern Negroes. The yet livid scar of Reconstruction also affects, if indirectly, one hundred and twenty million other Americans and, most certainly, many other people elsewhere . . . are aroused against the United States by contemporary incidents within our borders which have their remote origins in Reconstruction itself."

If the question is asked, "How long will this be true?", "There can be no certain answer. The South is reacting in predictable fashion to old and new racial pressures . . . Today the Southern moderate is as suspect as were his Reconstruction prototypes. Today a more determined Negro is again faced by a nearly unified white South no less determined than in 1868 to circumvent the intent of the federal government. Today the singing of 'Dixie,' the waving of a Confederate flag, and the stump orator's passionate appeal to the past are as sure fire as in the 1870's."

CATHERINE T. DAGGETT

HERBERT T. SILSBY, II, A History of Aurora: Hancock County Publishing Company, Ellsworth, 1958; pp. 159.

The history of Maine towns is far from complete. A real step in bridging the gap has been taken by A History of Aurora by Herbert T. Silsby, II. For residents and natives of that town the book gives a wealth of factual information. It also has much to offer for those who are interested in the history of Hancock County and, indeed, the history of Maine as a whole.

The text is divided into eight chapters dealing with geographical characteristics, settlement, pot and auger days, lumbering, political, brick school house, Aurora and Amherst Congregational Church, and Civil War to present. An appendix of some 60 pages contains valuable records of births, deaths, marriages, the censuses of 1850 and 1880, quotations from town meeting records, lists of town officers and servicemen, and an admirable bibliography.

Of special mention in the appendix are two poems, "The Drowning of John Roberts" and "The Champion of Moose Hill." Both are examples of our folklore, which too often has escaped recording. "Makers of Maine," by Frances Wright Turner, appears on the title page.

Fifteen illustrations ranging from pictures of the Land Lottery Ticket of 1786 to the Aurora Town Hall in 1957 do much to supplement the text. The early maps are of particular interest.

A quick survey of the vital statistics and lists of town officers indicates the prominent part which the Silsby family has taken in Aurora from the settlement by Samuel Silsby in 1805 down to the present day. One could wish that the author had included more items of anecdotal nature. A wealth of them must have been available to him, but perhaps he refrained from using this material for fear that A History of Aurora would appear to be a history of the Silsby family.

The author uses "pot and auger days" to explain the settlement period when the pot represented the fireplace and the auger one of the principal tools in constructing houses and barns. This reviewer has always heard "pod" and auger days used for the same purpose, distinguishing the antique pod auger from the modern screw type. Here is room for antiquarians to consider details of usage in Hancock County compared to other sections of the state.

The chapter on the brick school house suggests a wider study of educational theory and practice a century ago. Aurora built a far larger and better schoolhouse than was common in this state at that time. Did other towns in that area copy from Aurora or was this strictly a local phenomenon?

The Confession of Faith and the Covenant adopted by the Aurora Church in 1830 have some quaint and puzzling language. They shed interesting light on the theological outlook of the time. While the language of the Covenant is involved, the spirit of the "promise to walk together" might well be copied by other organizations everywhere.

Mr. Silsby makes only a passing reference to the similarity between the lumber contracts of the 1810's, by which the land owner retained title until the product was marketed, and present-day conditional sales contracts. This subject might well have further study and expanded treatment. This reviewer also wishes that Mr. Silsby had developed further the transition from farming in the conventional sense to the growing of blueberries and also that he had not found 1911 and the coming of the automobile such a convenient stopping point. Mr. Silsby's contemporaries and their children will often wish that the narrative and factual tabulations might have been brought down to date. However, this is asking too much of one who has written the history of his native town as a labor of love rather than as a venture for profit.

GLENN R. MCINTIRE

FATHER BERARD HAILE, MAUD OAKES, and LELAND C. WYMAN, Beautyway: A Navajo Ceremonial: Pantheon Books, Inc., 1957; pp. 218, 16 plates, text supplement 83 pp; $8.50.

This handsome book on Beautyway, a Navajo ceremonial, is the fifty-third volume of the Bollingen Series. The work includes a text of the Beautyway recorded and translated by Father Berard Haile, who is undoubtedly one of the greatest authorities on Navajo language and culture, having lived for more than sixty years among the Navajo. Two variants of the Beautyway myth are also presented, recorded by Father Berard and Maud Oakes. The book includes 16 color plates, reproduced after tempera paintings recorded by Maud Oakes, Franc J. Newcomb, and Laura A. Armer. Dr. Leland C. Wyman, a devoted student of Navajo language and culture, has done excellently the laborious job of editing the entire work. In addition to his illuminating commentaries on the texts, Dr. Wyman has also contributed most helpful chapters explaining Navajo mythology, songs, ceremonials, sandpaintings, and the geography of Navajo country. It is evident to the present reviewer that this important work would probably never have been made available to the general public had it not been for the position of leadership assumed by Dr. Wyman in organizing the project. One is also grateful to the Bollingen Foundation for its part in making this important work available at a most modest cost.

Myth, drama, ritual, song, and the graphic arts all combine in a harmonious and inter-related manner to form for the Navajo what we term a ceremonial. As a reader of Beautyway will immediately realize, the Navajo ceremonial is tremendously rich and complex, often requiring up to nine days for its performance, and involving the leadership of a paid specialist, known as a "singer," who has spent many years of apprenticeship learning, among other things, possibly some 500 songs. Most Navajo ceremonials are performed primarily for the curing of a person who is ill in either body, mind, or spirit, for realistically the Navajo recognize that there is an interrelatedness among the various components which go to make up the complex human being. Through the ceremonial the Navajo is able to find, as Dr. Wyman has written, "sociability, prestige, security, some actual medical therapy, and above all potent psychotherapy." The ceremonial can purify or protect from contamination; it can work to conquer "fear, insecurity, bad dreams, or some other condition that seems beyond rational control." Beautyway specifically works to reestablish a state of beauty within the patient, for all mankind, and for all life. In essence all Navajo ceremonials attempt to establish a harmonious relationship between man and the universe, or between man and the supernatural world.

The details of the myth of Beautyway are too complex to describe within the brief space of a review. It should be said, however, that this myth and the hundreds of other Navajo myths describe the adventures of a host of symbolical beings, good and bad, of types and qualities little different from those that have been created by men of East and West from the beginning of time. In the Navajo myths there are found heroes and monsters, magical chants and spells, temptations and quests; in fact, the whole gamut of human emotions, problems, and aspirations is symbolically presented, through myth and its accompanying rite, for the benefit of men. The geographical setting is, of course, the land that is familiar to the Navajo, and the actors are clothed in forms known to the Navajo, but the fundamental principles represented in the drama are those that are common to all mankind.

The Navajo language is undoubtedly one of the most difficult and most complex of all the languages of the world. Much credit should, therefore, be given to Father Berard for his masterful translation of the texts of Beautyway. Father Berard has steered a path between a too literal translation, which would be almost unintelligible to the average reader, and a too idiomatic translation that would lose the flavor and force of the original Navajo. The reader who is unfamiliar with Navajo material might have difficulty in understanding the translated text of Beautyway, for often the sequence of events is neither clear nor logical. This problem is resolved to a great extent, however, through the explanations of Dr. Wyman. The supplement text in Navajo is of interest primarily for the specialist.

It is significant that Dr. Wyman has incorporated within his Introductions no less than three substantial quotations from the late Dr. Ananda K. Coomaraswamy, one of the world's leading authorities on oriental art and thought. These quotations help to demonstrate the significant position which the Navajo arts (myth, ritual, sandpaintings, and so forth) should occupy among the world's Traditions; the quotations suggest to the student deeper meanings to be found within traditional American Indian materials, and they point to a field which still lies open to exploration. Indeed it should be said that Dr. Coomaraswamy has been instrumental in encouraging many American students to take stock of the values, and the great heritage, which remain to be discovered among our own indigenous American Indians. Certainly this publication of the Navajo ceremonial Beautyway is an important contribution towards the understanding of America's pre-Columbian heritage, and it should not be forgotten that, in spite of the many changes now occurring within Navajo culture, Beautyway is still a living Way among the Navajo Indian peoples.

HERMAN DREER, The Tie That Binds: Meador Publishing Company, Boston, 1958; pp. 374; $3.00.

The Tie That Binds by Herman Dreer is a story of a deeply religious boy who retains that character as he goes to college and grows into manhood. It is a story of the aspirations, achievements, and failures of youth and maturity. As the section headings indicate, it is a book of "presumptions, adventure, business," and, most of all, "romance."

One of the "presumptions" is that America is not the land of equal opportunity. The book opens at the beginning of the twentieth century, and the upper class in St. Louis is concerned with the growing number of hyphenated Americans. There is a fear of the increasing number of Southern and Eastern European and Asiatic immigrants.

The leading character, Calvin, devotes himself to the ideal of equal opportunity for all, however. His open-mindedness and religious nature bring him nothing but success in the world of "adventure, business, and romance." In World War II Cal becomes a colonel in the Air Force and, as the highest ranking officer from St. Louis, is treated to a gala homecoming after the conflict. His military success and his position as one of the leading lawyers of St. Louis follow his graduation from Bowdoin and Harvard summa cum laude.

These accomplishments are in marked contrast to the life and career of one of Calvin's closest friends, Carl, whose un-Christian living brings him continual failures in his romantic and business experiences and death at an early age.

It is in the world of romance that Calvin finds the greatest happiness, while maintaining his devotion to the ideal of equal opportunity. He falls in love with Angelina Galasso, an art teacher whose sixteen pupils include eight Negroes, one Chinese, three Jews, and two Italians.

Angela's devotion to teaching and her impartiality in explaining history and the contributions of minority groups in the formulation of it especially impress him. After a joyous courtship, they are happily married, and one has the feeling that the world would be a glorious place in which to live if men only followed the path chosen by Calvin.

Authors

W. HODDING CARTER '27, A.M. (Harvard 1947), veteran of World War II and winner of the 1946 Pulitzer Prize in Journalism, is Editor and Publisher of the Delta Democrat-Times in Greenville, Miss. A well-known Southern liberal who has long championed moderation, he was honored by Bowdoin with the degree of doctor of letters in 1947. His books include Southern Legacy (1950) and Where Main Street Meets the River (1953.)

HERBERT T. SILSBY, II, '48 is a partner in the Ellsworth law firm of Silsby & Silsby. Following his graduation from Bowdoin in 1947 he entered Boston University Law School and was admitted to the Maine Bar in 1949. At the age of 26 he was named judge of the Ellsworth Municipal Court.

LELAND C. WYMAN '18, Ph.D. (Harvard, 1922), is Professor of Biology at Boston University, where he was University Lecturer during 1958-59. Although primarily a biologist, he has done extensive work in ethnology, ethno-biology, and cultural anthropology among the Navaho Indians of New Mexico and Arizona.

HERMAN DREER '10 holds master of arts degrees from both the Virginia Theological Seminary and College and the University of Chicago. In 1955 he received a doctor of philosophy degree in sociology from Chicago. At present he is Professor of English and Social Science at Harris Teachers College in St. Louis, Mo., and is minister of the King's Way Baptist Church.

Reviewers

CATHERINE TRAVIS DAGGETT, wife of Professor Athern P. Daggett '25, is best known to Bowdoin men and Brunswick townspeople as an actress of wide and varied talents. Before her marriage in 1936 she studied drama in Detroit and at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art in London. She is a graduate of Randolph-Macon Woman's College in Virginia.

GLENN R. MCINFIRE '25 is Assistant Treasurer of the College. A native of Waterford, he is keenly interested in Maine history. He was named Acting Bursar at Bowdoin in 1932 and received an honorary master of arts degree in 1953.

JOSEPH E. BROWN '44 is the author of Sacred Pipe, a book about the religion of the Sioux Indians, which was published not only in this country but also in Europe in German, French, and Italian. For the past four years he has been a member of the faculty at Verde Valley School in Sedona, Ariz.

ROLAND L. O'NEAL '59 received his degree in June cum laude and with honors in history. He wrote his honors paper on "Toward the Twentieth Century American College Curriculum: Bowdoin Under Chamberlain and Hyde." During the summer he worked as an assistant in the office of Vice President Bela W. Norton '18 and is now on active duty with the Army in Virginia.

Notes

John H. Rich jr. is the author of "The Reluctant Warriors," an article which appeared in the June 11, 1959, issue of the magazine The Reporter. In the article he describes the East German regular army, the Border Police, the navy, the air force, and other military groups. Mr. Rich, who is NBC correspondent in West Berlin, concludes, "As of today East German soldiers would evidently find it difficult to open fire on their brothers in the West, or in the East. But they are under constant pressure to overcome this hesitation."

"If the Soviets and the East German Communists can convince the troops that there's no future for them in the West, if they can develop in them a collective pride and persuade them that their new goals are valid, then East Germany will have a very effective little army."

Clement F. Robinson '03 is the author of "Of Magrath, Spilsbury and Homicides," which appeared in the June, 1959, issue of The Journal of The Maine Medical Association.

Dabney W. Caldwell '48 is the author of "Glacial Lake and Glacial Marine Clays of the Farmington Area, Maine," a 48-page booklet describing the geology and stratigraphy of clay deposits of the Sandy River and tributaries between Strong and Anson in southeastern Franklin County and southwestern Somerset County. The booklet was published by the Maine Department of Economic Development on June 1, 1959.

On June 11 Dr. Caldwell received his doctorate in geology at Harvard University. At the same time he was promoted to the rank of Assistant Professor of Geology at Wellesley College.

Edwin B. Benjamin '37 is the author of "Fame, Poetry, and the Order of History in the Literature of the English Renaissance," an article which appears in Studies in the Renaissance, Volume VI (1959).

Frederick W. Whittaker '44, President of Bangor Theological Seminary, is the author of an article entitled "Man's Plight — Greatly Exaggerated" in the April, 1959, issue of United Church Herald.

Mrs. Edward Stafford H'49 is the author of "Ahnighito," which appeared in the June, 1959, issue of Down East Magazine. The article tells how the world's largest known meteorite was excavated from the Arctic wastes and brought to New York by Admiral Robert E. Peary '77, Mrs. Stafford's father.

Emerson Hunt '23 is the author of an article entitled "Bell's Attic Laboratory Is Created Anew," which appeared in the Summer, 1959, issue of Bell Telephone Magazine. In the article Mr. Hunt, who is general information manager of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company, reports on the reconstruction of Alexander Graham Bell's original workshop.

Lincoln Smith '32 is the author of "Professional Administrators as Regulatory Commissioners," which appeared in the August 13, 1959, issue of Public Utilities Fortnightly.

Other recent publications by Professor Smith include "Town Manager Government — An Evaluation" in Social Science, January, 1959, and "Laymen as Regulatory Commissioners," which appeared in two parts in Public Utilities Fortnightly, on May 7 and May 21, 1959.

Dr. Smith is now Assistant Professor of Political Science at New York University School of Commerce, Accounts, and Finance.

Leland C. Wyman '18 is the author of "Navaho Indian Painting: Symbolism, Artistry, and Psychology," published in pamphlet form earlier this year by the Boston University Press. The pamphlet contains the University Lecture which Dr. Wyman delivered on February 17, 1959, at Boston University, where he is Professor of Biology in the College of Liberal Arts.

"Current Trends in Terms of Sale," by Roy A. Foulke '19, Vice President of Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., is a pamphlet consisting of two parts. The first discusses selling terms, beginning in colonial times and continuing up through the trends since 1953.

The second part of the pamphlet is a series of financial ratio tables based on financial statements for the years 1953-57 and 78 lines of business activity, from airplane parts and accessories to womenswear, coats, suits, and dresses.

Dr. David Brandenburg '43, Professor of History at The American University in Washington, D.C., is the author of an article entitled "A French Aristocrat Looks at American Farming," which appeared in the July, 1958, issue of Agricultural History.

Dr. David B. Walker, Assistant Professor of Government at Bowdoin, is the author of an article entitled "Rufus Choate, a Case Study in Old Whiggery," which appeared in the fall, 1958, issue of Essex Institute Historical Collections.

Donald A. Sears '44 is the co-author of The Sentence in Context, published by Harcourt, Brace and Company. The volume will be reviewed in a forthcoming issue of the ALUMNUS.

Bowdoin Browsing

Oliver F. Emerson '49, the author of this "Browsing" column, is better known to his friends as "Ollie." For some years now he has been associated with the printing and publishing business. His firm, the Tower Press, is one of the most prominent of many printing and publishing companies in Cleveland, Ohio.

When Ollie was elected Senior Class Marshal, the "Orient" described him as "colorful cheerleader of the past football season, Meddiebempster, track star, and perhaps the most energetic man on the pre-Ivy campus." He majored in history, sang in the Glee Club for Fred Tillotson, and high jumped on Jack Magee's varsity track team. When track and musical interests conflicted, the sparks flew, for he was a standout in both fields and neither Tilly nor Jack was willing to relinquish his services.

He has continued his musical interests as the guiding light of "The Sleepless Knights," an informal but accomplished double quartet that is well known in Cleveland. He has also been active in the Bowdoin Club of Cleveland, which he has served as president and secretary-treasurer and now as Alumni Council representative.

S. J. Perelman filed not long ago his new record for reading Time magazine — seventeen and a half seconds. I don't know what the record is for whipping through an average-size, 400-page book (set 11 to 13), but if three minutes and sixteen seconds is worth mentioning, I thought I'd check around.

The book that furnished me this fast track is Vance Packard's The Status Seekers—McKay ($4.50) — which "focuses the penetrating beam of research and analysis on the murkiest, least understood aspect of the national scene — the status and class structure of our society." Packard, author also of The Hidden Persuaders, who knows another profitable subject when he sees one, has picked a topic which won't fail in some murky, gossipy way to satisfy everyone.

To Packard, a "status seeker" is someone trying to surround himself with material or psychic symbols as evidence of claim to a superior rank. These symbols run from the most necessary one today — a college diploma — to all sorts of comic absurdities, such as whether you pull up your trousers to save the crease when you sit down (lower white collar) or the old two-pen-desk-set-vs.-the-one-pen-desk-set job symbol. Although hardly "bold, fast-moving and witty" as expounded on the cover jacket, Packard does convert some back-fence facts into some pretty funny insights to the American scene. Starting off with the premise of the "Great American Dream" — our forefathers' vision of a classless society — he replaces it with the growing problem of the stratification of class boundaries — how they are developing, where they flourish, why, and so forth. He takes you into the stratified American home in Plywood Heights, tells you that practically everyone in the neighborhood makes within $1500 per year of one another's salary, uses essentially the same decor, wants a flashy exterior to inflate the family's ego, and the hell with how it's basically constructed inside. He leads you by the nose (and you'd better hold it here) through the corporate barnyard to evaluate "job prestige." In this day, when psychic income is fast replacing the real thing, thanks to Uncle Sam, he cites the peculiar symbols of corporate status — desks being ranked by wood: mahogany outranking walnut, walnut outranking oak, and so forth. And if you're a junior executive who thinks a washroom is a place to relieve yourself, then it's back to Amos Tuck, fella. According to Packard, in any large corporation one of the most sought-after status symbols is a semi-private toilet. And these are pretty much the sole property of presidents and executive vice presidents. Washroom means just that and how any further problems are resolved he didn't say. From church and club analysis it should be obvious, but apparently isn't, that similar income groups are cliquish, similar intellectual groups stick together, and similar ethnic and religious groups follow suit. All have group or club status symbols like insisting that in men's clubs women guests are frequently asked to use the side entrance.(!)

Other chapters on "Gauging Social Position" and "Molding Tender Minds" give the reader countless peeks into the narrow, perverted extremes to which many people will go for the purpose of identifying or "upgrading" themselves in some peculiar way. The repetition of these is overwhelming and boring and ultimately proves over and over that human beings can be stupid, narrow, and pretty frustrating. Frequently Packard makes the mistake, at the end of a chapter, of employing the one-sentence-generalization ploy. His chapter on Voting, for example, he wraps up thus: "In short, people vote pretty much as they go to church. It's the thing to do."

Highly significant to me, however, are the facts Packard finds regarding the extreme importance of a college education relating to class division. At the book's beginning, interspersed with such profound factual observations as "Others have noted that bridge playing is largely confined to the upper two classes, and bingo to the lower three classes," the author explains what he means by a five-class system. This system is not entirely his own. He often cites the works of Arthur Hollingshead, W. F. Whyte, C. Wright Mills, and other sociologists who generally agree that the accepted pattern of class distinction lies in five class groups: 1) the real upper class, 2) the semi-upper class, 3) the limited success class, 4) the working class, and 5) the real lower class. The first two he labels "The Diploma Elite"; the last three he calls "The Supporting Classes."

Throughout the book Packard makes constant reference to the college diploma as the criterion — from the humorous use of it as a social wedge to its absolute necessity as a job-getter. Citing the increasing use of personnel selectivity devices — aptitude tests, personality tests, management consultant interviews, outside personnel-specialists interviews — it is obvious that business is becoming so vast, mechanistic, and impersonally selective that having a college diploma as a basic qualification is a foregone conclusion. Playing the percentages and not the man is the modern-day corporate method. Packard's own conclusion is that further stratification of our classes will cause an even more rigid and resentful society if the blind, almost pathetic importance that supporting classes put on a college degree is not recognized. "If education is to be the main key to a higher-status way of life, then the availability of education to all of high native ability becomes crucial. If the channels of access to higher education become clogged at the lower levels, then we will indeed have a rigid society, and a potentially inflammatory situation."

Alumni Clubs

CENTRAL NEW YORK

The Arthur Chapmans '17 were hosts for the Bowdoin Club of Central New York at a picnic outing on August 22.

KENNEBEC VALLEY

On May 26 about 45 alumni and guests gathered at the Augusta Country Club for the spring meeting of the Kennebec Valley Bowdoin Club. A seven o'clock dinner followed a six o'clock social hour.

President Willard Arnold '51 introduced Carleton Merrill '96 of Skowhegan, the senior alumnus present. The reading of the secretary's minutes was waived, and Treasurer Adrian Asherman '52 reported that the club had a "small surplus." President Arnold announced the names and home towns of the eleven new freshmen from the Kennebec Valley region who will enter Bowdoin this fall. He also announced the names of men to serve on a special committee to conduct sub-freshman affairs in the club area: Kirby Hight '38, James Schoenthaler '50, Jon Lund '51, and Willard Arnold '51. He completed the brief business session by noting that the Glee Club had made a successful concert appearance in Waterville in March.

Thomas Macomber '50 was the winner of a Bowdoin mirror in a drawing for the door prize.

Peter Barnard '50 of the Alumni Office spoke briefly about current affairs at the College. Dr. Gerard Brault of the French department discussed his research into the Bowdoin family, its coat of arms, and the College seal. The third and principal speaker, Professor Reinhard Korgen, talked about Scandinavia, illustrating his remarks with a series of color slides, taken on his recent sabbatical leave.

KNOX-LINCOLN-WALDO

The annual ladies' night of the Knox-Lincoln-Waldo Bowdoin Club was held on May 22 at the Knox Hotel in Thomaston.

John Gould '31, author, editor, and raconteur, was the speaker of the evening. He talked about some of Maine's early history, to the enjoyment of everyone.

LOS ANGELES

On June 10 members of the Bowdoin Club of Los Angeles met at the Jonathan Club for luncheon. Their guest was Professor James Storer, on his way to the Philippines and a year of work and study under a Fulbright grant.

Secretary Dave Smith '46 reports that those present were Dr. Ralph Bucknam M'95, William Spinney '13, Albert Bartlett '20, Lawrence Spingarn '40, Terry Dunning '49, Dr. Ken Senter '45, Reginald Spurr '46, and the Secretary.

FUTURE CLUB MEETINGS

PORTLAND — Monthly Luncheon — Cumberland Club — Wednesday, September 2, 12 noon.

RHODE ISLAND — Monthly Luncheon — University Club — Wednesday, September 9, 12:15 p.m.

WORCESTER — "Bowdoin Family Party" (Alumni and Families) — Home of Dr. Philip Burke '44 on Lake Quinsigimond — Saturday, September 12, 1-5 p.m.

PORTLAND — Monthly Luncheon — Cumberland Club — Wednesday, October 7, 12 noon.

RHODE ISLAND (Providence) — Monthly Luncheon — University Club — Wednesday, October 7, 12:15 p.m.

ALBANY — Friday evening, October 16.

VERMONT — Saturday evening, October 17.

PORTLAND — Monthly Luncheon — Cumberland Club — Wednesday, November 4, 12 noon.

RHODE ISLAND (Providence) — Monthly Luncheon — University Club — Wednesday, November 4, 12:15 p.m.

PENOBSCOT (Bangor) — Evening meeting — Penobscot Valley Country Club — Friday, November 6.

NEW YORK — Annual Dinner — Friday, January 22, 1960.

PHILADELPHIA — Annual Dinner — Saturday, January 23, 1960.

"In the lively discussion that preceded and continued through the meal, Professor Storer brought up and reviewed Bowdoin's position, as he saw it, with respect to financial standing with other colleges in similar circumstances," the Secretary reports, "as well as Bowdoin's position with respect to competition for subfreshmen."

On Sunday, June 28, members of the Los Angeles Club gathered at the Pasadena home of Secretary Dave Smith for an informal meeting. The guest of honor was Professor Elroy LaCasce '44. Club members enjoyed a steak dinner on the terrace. Those present included Mike Lo-Cicero '31 and his eighth-grade son, Richard, William Haines '50, Taylor Cole '45, Marvin Kaitz '54, and Bill Durst '56.

NORTHERN NEW JERSEY

Vice President Bela Norton '18 was the speaker at a meeting of the New Jersey Bowdoin Club on May 20 at the Hotel Suburban in East Orange. About twenty alumni were present. Following a social hour and dinner, Mr. Norton spoke on the current state of the College and described the work of his office. A period of questions and answers ensued. New Jersey alumni were reminded of the Glee Club's planned visit to their area next spring.

PENOBSCOT

Vice President and Mrs. Bela Norton '18 were guests of the Penobscot County Bowdoin Club at a dinner meeting at the Tarratine Club in Bangor on May 28. About 30 alumni and wives were present.

Following dinner Mr. Norton spoke on the state of the College, summer activities at Bowdoin, and the work of his office in public relations and development.

Retiring President John Woodcock '44 presided at the meeting. Elected to office were Franklin Eaton '42, President; Dr. Albert Babcock '48, Vice President; Malcolm Stevenson '50, Secretary-Treasurer; and Malcolm Morrell jr. '49, Council Member.

The editor-in-chief of the current volume of the Bowdoin Orient, George B. Chandler '90, was the energetic lad who in the fall of his sophomore year had climbed the Chapel spire, removed the freshman flag put up by Gilley '91 the night before, and affixed his own class flag to the peak, but he did not tell the story in the Orient until January 17, 1901. What method Gilley and, on successive nights in 1894, Moulton '98 and Don MacMillan '98 (then '97) used is not recorded, but in the spring of 1900 a homemade ladder was hooked to the first staple above the ground level, and Emerson '03, carrying on his back another ladder, hooked it on to the next higher staple and so on until he reached the top while three members of his class encouraged him from below.

The Orient during Chandler's editorship reflected the same energy which was to bring him success both in public life and for many years as manager of the Ohio Chamber of Commerce. In an early issue he announced that the Orient wanted no articles on national topics or on such subjects as Success, Perseverance, and the Value of Education. "What we desire is a discussion of live college topics." A later editorial note told contributors "how to write an Orient article." Two of his associate editors still survive — Tom Burr and Charlie Lincoln of the Class of '91.

The baseball season started with a victory on the Bowdoin field against Colby, the first defeat of Colby in Brunswick for many years. Subsequently the team won two out of three games with Colby, causing the Orient to feel that Bowdoin had "a firm grip on the college pennant." But this was not to be one of the very rare years when Bowdoin ended at the top. Bowdoin's star pitcher, W. M. Hilton '91, was unable to finish the season because of ill health, and Bates won the championship. The Bowdoin men attending the Waterville game with Colby were treated courteously, which seems to have been an unusual experience in those days.

For term themes in the spring term the juniors could choose between writing on the United States Civil Service for College Graduates and the Literary Style of Edmund Burke; the sophomores between Baseball as a National Game and the Manufacture of Iron. Sophomores who chose baseball could hardly foresee on the one hand the blanketing of baseball by football in college, and on the other hand Farm Leagues, Little Leagues, Babe Ruth Leagues, Pony Leagues, Junior Leagues, Town Leagues, and three national professional leagues.

One of the two "receptions" of the year was at the President's House with four of the senior professors and their wives in the reception line. "The Crescent and Mummy Clubs represented the leading young ladies of Brunswick." After refreshments college songs were sung and several solos were given by members of the faculty and their wives. Subsequently on June 18th, prior to Commencement, members of the junior class were guests at a reception at Professor Robinson's new residence. "From the day the professor extended the invitation in his usual inimitable manner all anticipated the event in the assurance that it would be fully up to the good times invariably reported by former classes." The class marched to the house, to be greeted by Brunswick's "fairest young ladies" together with all the professors and their wives and other Brunswick guests. Each student secured partners for eight subjects listed on "dance orders" for five-minute conversations. The subjects comprised current public and college events and some other rather saucy topics. Coeducation was the subject most vivaciously discussed. Refreshments and singing of college songs made a "happy termination to a year's work in chemistry under our beloved professor."

Ivy Day was, as usual, the greatest social event in the college year, but the field day contest which preceded it lacked upperclass competitors. The Orient characterized it like its two immediate predecessors "an unmitigated bore." Most of the winning times and distances would be equaled in schoolboy competitions today.

The Ivy Oration by G. F. Freeman on "Religion in the Public Schools" was printed in the Orient. He urged that secular education in the public schools be supplemented by religious instruction so that parochial schools would have no point in being. The Ivy poem was a ballad, "A Tale of the Tropics" by F. J. Allen.

An article in the Orient about the tablets in Memorial Hall called attention to some features which can now be observed in the lobby better than on the dark walls of the upper hall. The lettering was taken from an alphabet designed by Dürer. The border is adorned with a tracery of wild growth indigenous to Maine representing forty-eight varieties and was the result of the collaboration of a group of graduates of American art schools. Etching the names instead of casting or engraving them was a novel device enabling the use of a much better quality of metal.

The Commencement issue of the Orient set a standard which is not even approximated today. Preparing it was evidently a careful job completed after Commencement, the paper being mailed to the subscribers during the summer.

There is a complete account of Brunswick's sesquicentennial celebration in which faculty and students took a prominent part. The centennial poem was by Professor Chapman, and the faculty in carriages and students on foot formed the second division of the parade with the college banner ahead and each class marching behind a streamer displaying its colors. The juniors were clad in caps and gowns, the sophomores carried tall hats and canes, and the freshmen had umbrellas. The sophomores were so pleased with themselves that subsequently over forty of them with their tall hats and canes paraded on Congress Street in Portland, creating "quite a sensation." The Orient says that they sang "Marching Through Georgia," but wasn't it "Phi Chi"?

Public exercises were held in the First Parish Church, and five hundred persons attended a noon dinner in the town hall. Among the speakers were the governor of the state and three congressmen, including Tom Reed '60. President Hyde spoke for the College. In the evening "the new and elegant town hall was brightly astir with dancers, including the elite of Brunswick society and college gallants. . . . Town and college merged in the dizzy whirl. . . . It is indeed surprising that an occasion entirely free of cost should have been so exclusive." The only "round dancers" were the four extras inserted among the seven square and contra dances. (It was the same town hall which still graces Maine Street.)

Class Day had the rather unusual experience of good weather for the exercises under the Oak and for the "dance on the green." It was "the most successful Class Day ever held." The class historian, W. M. Emery, delivered the history "with that racy and versatile old pen that the Bowdoin boys know so well and which we hope will not desert him in the future." The speaker was to become a distinguished journalist.

Wednesday featured, as usual, Medical School graduation and evening fraternity reunions. At the Commencement meeting of the Governing Boards General Thomas H. Hubbard '57, who was and continued to be one of the College's most generous benefactors, was chosen a trustee. A vote of thanks was extended Librarian G. T. Little '77 in appreciation of his labors in preparing the first general catalog of the College, which had been issued during the year. A committee was appointed to plan for transferring a part at least of the medical course to Portland and another committee to consider the question of the erection of a residence for the President.

The story of the President's House was told by Philip S. Wilder '23, Assistant to the President, in the Alumnus for February, 1953. The house, which was standing on the lot now vacant between Professor Taylor's house and the Cleaveland House on Federal Street, was bought by the College in 1867 and occupied by President Harris until he left in 1871. His successor, General Chamberlain, having his own residence on Maine Street opposite the northwest corner of the campus, the College rented the house for several years to the college treasurer and sold it in 1874 to Peleg Chandler, who moved it to its present location. Subsequently the College reacquired the house at its new location, and President Hyde went into occupancy soon after he became President. Whether the committee set up by the Boards in 1889 was arranging for the purchase or was considering a new presidential residence is not clear.

The newly erected gymnasium, now the heating station, was named by the Boards for Dr. D. A. Sargent '75. The north wing of the Chapel was added to the college library to take care of 15,000 volumes.

The Commencement procession was headed, as for many years was usual, by the Salem Cadet Band. Nine of the graduating class spoke at the exercises, the Commencement prize going to Frank L. Staples for his discussion of "The Southern Question." Degrees of LL.D. were given to United States Senator Frye '50; W. W. Virgin '44; and Hugh McCulloch '29, Secretary of the Treasury under Johnson and later under Cleveland, in addition to several degrees of D.D. and honorary A.M. Degrees of A.M. "in course" were also awarded to ten and "out of course" to four others. This did not mean that Bowdoin was establishing a graduate school but indicated that, by going through the proper formalities and paying a definite stipend, graduates of the College subsequent to graduation could obtain this degree "pro merito" instead of "honoris causa."

Nobody needed to go away hungry from the Commencement dinner. The menu quoted in the Orient lists boiled ham, tongue, corned beef, roast chicken, turkey, salmon, lobster and chicken salad, plain lobster, lobster patties, six vegetables, a dozen relishes, four kinds of pie, three kinds of ice cream, seven kinds of cake, six kinds of fruit in addition to raisins, four kinds of nuts, and two kinds of berries with cream. Tea and coffee must have been appreciated after this "feast of viands" as the Orient calls it.

Introducing the speakers, President Hyde spoke of the immediate need for $100,000 to be added to the funds of the College. Representatives of the Trustees and Overseers spoke, followed by Senator Frye '50, F. M. Drew '58, representing the G.A.R.; three other distinguished speakers, and representatives of four of the reunion classes. All of these speeches are quoted or summarized in the Orient.

This issue of the Orient comprised forty-nine pages and besides sesquicentennial and Commencement news did not skimp on college news, "Collegii tabuli," and other departments.

Future commentators on college history will sadly feel the lack of any such comprehensive history of modern Commencements. The editorial board of the Orient is nowadays so anxious to distribute copies at the Commencement dinner and solicit subscriptions that they prepare a scissors and paste preconceived issue and make no record of the real events of Commencement. It's a job which the college newspaper should do and which no other publication does or can do. Newspaper reports from day to day are incomplete and unedited. Perhaps some time an editorial board of the Orient will again be headed by a George Chandler who will perceive the real function of a college newspaper.

Commencement Day ended with a reception in the evening in upper Memorial Hall, closing, as the Orient says, "the most successful year in the history of Bowdoin College."

The debating team (Hawes, Goodspeed, Adams, and Brewster) lost to Wesleyan. Brewster collected the funds necessary for the debating team's trip by fifty cent contributions solicited at the fraternity houses.

On Patriots' Day General Chamberlain reminisced eloquently on Abraham Lincoln to a large audience in the Church on the Hill.

Professor Capen of Clark College lectured in Memorial Hall on Maeterlinck under the auspices of Romania (the Classics Club.)

Prior to the baseball season the sixth annual rally was held in Memorial Hall, complete with decorations, refreshments, college band, and souvenir Bowdoin flags. Speakers were Professor Robinson; Minot '96, a lifelong Bowdoin enthusiast; Fisher '81, a distinguished oarsman when an undergraduate; Beane '04, a former football captain now for many years probate judge in Kennebec County; Hawes '76 of the Athletic Council; Bert Morrill '10, captain of the track team; "Pus" Newman '10, football captain; "Baldy" Stanwood '08, the previous year's baseball captain; and "Doc" Whit. Burton '09 (now Mr. Justice) led the cheering, which "bid fair to lift the boards off the floor in the cage above."

Chester B. Emerson '04 was ordained to the Congregational ministry at the Church on the Hill, entering on a distinguished career as a Congregationalist and subsequently as an Episcopalian clergyman.

During the spring the seniors voted to wear caps and gowns to Sunday chapel and caps alone on week days. The Orient commended the distinguished appearance of those of the class who conformed to the custom, but it irked and was short-lived.

On May 8th, at a dinner at the Hotel Eagle, Professor Chapman was felicitated by the faculty on his forty years of service to the College. At the time the "old faculty" stood unbroken: Robinson, Lee, Johnson, Little and Moody, all with twenty-five or more years of service; Hutchins, twenty-four; Woodruff, Whittier, Files, and Mitchell, ten years or more. The group were to disintegrate before the current college generation had graduated.

Bowdoin won the State Track Meet at Orono, scoring more points than all the other colleges combined. Five new records were established. At the New England meet Bowdoin took fourth place. Brewster '09 and Woodward '10 walked to Boston for the meet, taking over three days on the road.

Amherst College offered Dr. Burnett the position of full professor of psychology and head of the department. The apprehensions of the College that as an Amherst graduate he would feel that he should accept the call were stilled with the pleasing news that he had decided to stay at Bowdoin.

Under the supervision of John Appleton '02, forester, the Thorndike Oak was given expert treatment in the expectation that its life would be prolonged for at least seventy-five years longer. Fifty years later and the tree still stands safe and sound.

On Ivy Day the junior class "fulfilled its duty," apparently with much of the ancient enthusiasm. The Field Day was replaced by a baseball game with Bates. Bowdoin won, thus falsifying the subsequent tradition that Bowdoin never won the Ivy Day game. The oration was by D. J. Readey; the poem by Robert Hale; and the ode by W. S. Guptill. The Wooden Spoon went to Jim Hamburger (now Claverie), who was to win the Alumni Achievement Award in 1946.

The high spot of the baseball season was the defeat of Dartmouth 6 to 1 at the beginning of the season. Otherwise the team suffered from lack of practice. Rarely was a second team available for practice games. Most of the games in the State Series were won by the better practiced teams from the other three colleges.

The Commencement issue of twenty-four pages, although not up to the high standard of twenty years before, nevertheless pictures the events clearly for the later reader. The Alexander Prize Speaking on Monday evening replaced the former sophomore prize speaking. The first prize went to W. B. Stephens, whose death a few months ago blocked his eager hope to attend his fiftieth reunion.

Class Day was "intolerably hot" for the morning exercises in Memorial Hall and the afternoon exercises under the Oak. Burton, president of the class, presided; the prayer was by Newton, the oration by Stahl, and the poem by Hovey. Stahl discussed the influence of the American college on the community. The class presented to the College solid oak furniture for use on the Memorial Hall stage.

Under the Oak the opening address was by Atwood, the history by Marsh, and the closing address by Brewster. The effort to have a "dance on the green" was now definitely abandoned, and the Commencement Hop took place in Memorial Hall. The Orient lists the names of sixty "ladies present," a large proportion of whom were to become Bowdoin wives.

Wednesday was Medical School graduation with an address by DeAlva S. Alexander '70, Member of Congress from the Buffalo, New York, district. Thursday was Commencement Day, beginning with the meeting of the Alumni Association and concluding with the banquet. The Class of 1904 appeared in the procession in Japanese garb, carrying palm leaf fans, and the members of the class, accompanied by a band, were very much in evidence on the campus smoking the pipe of peace, cheering the halls, and listening to a short address in Japanese by F. E. Whitney '73.

The Commencement speakers were Burton, Stahl, Stanwood, Atwood, and Hovey. LL.D.'s were bestowed on General Ellis Spear '58, New Hampshire Governor H. B. Quinby '69, and Maine Associate Justices A. R. Savage and G. E. Bird. Two D.D.'s, one Litt.D., and three A.M.'s were also awarded.

The alumni present at the dinner crowded Memorial Hall, and service was hampered. President Hyde reported the addition of half a million dollars to the college endowment within a year but foresaw that further funds were going to become necessary with the fast increasing enrollment of students from out of the state. Other general speakers at the Commencement dinner were Governor Quinby of New Hampshire, Governor Fernald of Maine, General Hubbard, Judge Savage, Charles L. Hawes '76 for the Overseers, and Professor Chapman, who received "tremendous applause after one of his inimitable talks." A large part of the audience oozed out of the crowded hall after Professor Chapman's speech and did not hear the representatives of seven reunion classes, but several of the speeches and particularly the last speech by Frost '01 were well worth waiting for.

The editor-in-chief of the Orient was D. F. Barnes '35, who was to go from journalism into insurance, and his associate was P. E. Sullivan '35, now a banker in Los Angeles.

The College as one of three residuary legatees of the million-dollar estate of Charles P. Kling received not only much needed funds but also a valuable library and art collection. The College also received an unrestricted bequest of $200,000 from the estate of J. C. Coombs '69. Mr. Coombs died in 1905, but the bequest was subject to life interests which had now expired.

Norman Thomas, the lifelong professional Socialist whose views nowadays do not sound so radical as they did in 1934, spoke to a capacity audience in Memorial Hall and prophesied that the present college generation would see this country adopt one of three policies: war, fascism, or "a sane form of socialism." The country was to experience the first of these three, escape the second, and acquaint itself with some of the features of the third. After the lecture Mr. Thomas "powwowed" with a large gathering at the DU house, pointing out the mistakes of President Theodore Roosevelt and Prime Minister McDonald—"A man charged with the idea that the welfare of his country depends on his staying in office"—and good naturedly quipped with inquiring students.

The Bowdoin Club of Portland in April put on a Bowdoin Night at the Moulton Union for alumni and sub-freshmen as well as for the undergraduates, replacing the old Bowdoin rally. Professor Herbert Brown was the principal speaker. That's enough to carry the true connotation: the affair was a success. "Rising Week" in April was a rather flaccid repetition of its predecessors.

Seven Bowdoin undergraduates signed up for MacMillan's arctic trip on the schooner "Bowdoin" which was to survey the islands lying off the northern tip of Labrador.

The annual bird lecture was by Dr. Olin S. Pettingill '30 on "Hudson Bay Birds."

Robert P. T. Collin '15 accepted an appointment as professor in the department in English for the coming year.

The Bowdoin Polar Bears, an instrumental predecessor to the singing Meddiebempsters, played a two-week engagement on a southern cruise of the Cunard Line steamship Manitania.

Rufus Jones, the distinguished Quaker and eminent American philosopher, lectured in Memorial Hall to a capacity audience on "Forces That Will Rebuild the World." Characteristically, Dr. Jones appealed for the strengthening of moral lives and gave many inspiring examples of the efficiency of kindness in a wicked world. Hitler's sun was just edging above the horizon, and the failure of "appeasement" to soften that maniac was yet to come. The kindly world which Dr. Jones visualized is sadly remote from modern conditions.

The track association composed of the four Maine colleges was disrupted by an eligibility squabble. The Athletic Council voted to compete with Amherst in 1935 and 1936 on the dates on which the state track meet had usually been held. The Council, however, did not withdraw from the state association, and left the first Wednesday in May open for the meet. On that date the Bowdoin team showed up for the contest. None of the other three colleges sent a team, and Bowdoin claimed the state championship by default under the constitutional provisions that failure to start at least fifteen men in the annual Field Day or refusal to be governed by the rules of the association would be cause for expulsion. Bates and Maine had a dual meet on the day when Bowdoin claimed the state meet should have taken place. There was, however, no doubt but that Bowdoin would have won the championship in any event.

The track team went on to win the New England track championship. By tying for second with five others at a height of six feet (better than he had ever done before) Crowell '35 edged out the victory for Bowdoin as Clark '99 had in the broad jump just thirty-five years before. Other Bowdoin point winners were Good '36, Allen '34 (now Treasurer of the College), Niblock '35, Marvin '35, and Soule '36. Good won both hurdles races; Allen, running side by side with Good for much of the course, was second in the high hurdles and fourth in the lows; Niblock won the shot put and was second in the discus; Marvin was third in the quarter and Soule fourth in the broad jump. Bowdoin's total was twenty-six; Northeastern was only one and one-half points behind. This was Bowdoin's first New England solo track victory since 1923, when for the second time in its history Bowdoin came out on top. In 1925 it was tied for first with Boston College. There had been an impressive number of years when the College came out second.

After the New England meet Good and Niblock represented the College at the international intercollegiates. Good captured the high hurdles and was a close second in the low hurdles, and Niblock was fifth in the shot put. Good was the second highest of all the point winners at the meet, and Bowdoin was eighth among the thirty-three teams with a total of ten points.

There was no elation at the outcome of the baseball season. Of the six games reported during the first of the season, Bowdoin won two, but the pre-Ivy Day issue mentions that Bowdoin was then temporarily in second place.

The Orient lists two hundred and fifty house guests in its pre-Ivy Day issue and reports the famous "name bands" which were to function in the various chapter houses. However, there was no further issue of the Orient until the Commencement Day issue. A historian of campus activities during the spring of 1934 is thereby balked from reporting whether the prospective dances took place and if there were any other Ivy Day festivities. That pre-Ivy Day issue of the Orient doesn't even mention the possibility of Ivy Day exercises except for the dances. It's discouraging to try to compile history in the lack of current factual material.

At the risk of harping on an outworn theme, it has to be said that as to the 1934 prefabricated Commencement issue, the reader cannot count as facts on all its projections. It can be believed that one hundred and nine seniors received degrees and that President Sills announced five new teachers, of whom Kamerling is still with us. Richard II was the Commencement play, and only seven honorary degrees were awarded—a refreshing interlude in the besprinkled honorary lists of many other years. The deserved granting of LL.D. to President Sills was thus very properly conspicuous. No other degree of LL.D. was bestowed. Class Day exercises were held under the Thorndike Oak with President Allen presiding and delivering the opening address. Morris read the class poem, and Redman gave the oration, entitled "The Collegeman's Dilemma." Clark was the class historian, finishing his speech in a gentle patter of rain. The torrents then descended, and the spectators scattered quickly while the class smoked a pipe of peace under a tree and cheered the halls in the rain.

Music at the Commencement Hop was to be by the Isham Jones name band, but we do not know who danced to the music.

Necrology

1888 HORATIO SMITH CARD, M.D., one of Bowdoin's oldest and most faithful alumni, died at his home in Goffstown, N. H., on June 22, 1959, less than ten days after he was present at the Commencement Dinner, as had been his custom for many years without fail. Born on September 11, 1866, in Gorham, he was a member of Gorham High School's first graduating class. Following his graduation from Bowdoin in 1888 he taught school for four years in Bath and for two years in Portland before entering the Maine Medical School, from which he was graduated in 1899.

He was a general practitioner in Boston for more than 50 years.

Dr. Card was a charter member of the South End Medical Club, a member for more than 45 years of the Boston Congregational Club, and a 66-year Mason. He served as president of the former University of Massachusetts (later Middlesex University) as well as Middlesex College of Medicine and Surgery in Cambridge, Mass. In addition, he was president of the Massachusetts Society for the Protection of the Insane and Mentally Infirm and the Freeman L. Lowell Memorial Hospital and Dispensary in Boston.

He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Josephine C. Morrison of Wendell, Mass., and Miss Martha O. Card of Goffstown, N. H.; two granddaughters, Miss Martha E. Morrison of Boston and Mrs. Eloise M. Pena of Iowa; and two great granddaughters. He was a member of Theta Delta Chi and Phi Beta Kappa fraternities.

1895 FRED LINCOLN FESSENDEN, who retired from the insurance business in 1946, died in Cincinnati, Ohio, on June 13, 1959. Born on September 7, 1873, in Bridgton, he prepared at Bridgton Academy and following his graduation magna cum laude from Bowdoin accepted a position with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, with which he served successively as clerk, agent, cashier, traffic manager, and sales manager. In 1906 he joined the Jarecki Chemical Company in St. Bernard, Ohio, as sales manager. He moved to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., in 1925 and worked for a year with Morang and Company. In 1926 he returned to Ohio and became a partner in the general insurance firm of Baker and Fessenden in Cincinnati.

A 33rd degree Mason, Mr. Fessenden was for many years a director and treasurer of the Central Building and Loan Company. Following his retirement in 1946 he divided his time between Cincinnati and St. Petersburg, Fla., where he was one of the most loyal and faithful members of the local Bowdoin club, which holds monthly luncheons from November through April. Surviving are a son, Dr. Willard B. Fessenden of Cincinnati; a grandson; and a granddaughter. He was a member of Theta Delta Chi and Phi Beta Kappa fraternities.

1896 WALTER MERRILL WILLIAMS, who served the town of Topsham as a selectman for more than 40 years, died there on August 4, 1959. Born in Bowdoinham on May 19, 1874, he prepared at Brunswick High School and attended Bowdoin for two years. He taught in both Topsham and Camden, and then his interest in athletics led him into professional baseball. He pitched for Toronto and other minor league clubs for five years before joining the Chicago Cubs as a pitcher. After an injury cut short his major league career, he pitched for a semi-professional team in Portland and also coached at Brunswick High School. With the exception of one year he served as selectman in Topsham continuously from 1912 to 1957. A new elementary school in Topsham was named in his honor five years ago. Known familiarly as "Pop," he was a member of Psi Upsilon fraternity.

1900 FRED URIAH WARD, retired Maine and Massachusetts educator, died at his home in Addison on June 12, 1959. Born on March 25, 1876, in Cherryfield, he prepared at the Eastern Maine Conference Seminary and entered Bowdoin as a sophomore. Following his graduation in 1900 he taught in Bucksport for two years and then became principal of Foxcroft Academy. In 1908 he was named principal of Attleboro (Mass.) High School and three years later became headmaster at Taunton (Mass.) High School, where he remained until his retirement in 1946. At that time he moved to Addison, where he served as first selectman for ten years, organized the Civic Club, and was a member of the board of assessors. He was also a Mason, a member of the Pleasant River Grange, and treasurer of the Mayhew Library Association. Surviving are two sons, Col. Edgar R. C. Ward of Falmouth and Lt. Col. Frederiek G. Ward '30; a sister, Mrs. Walter Smith of St. Petersburg, Fla.; four grandchildren; and three great grandchildren. He was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity.

1902 HAROLD BENJAMIN EASTMAN, a business and insurance agent in Portland for nearly 50 years, died in that city on June 23, 1959. Born on June 24, 1878, in Portland, he prepared at Deering High School and the Kents Hill School. Following his graduation from Bowdoin he studied for two years at the Yale School of Forestry and received a master of forestry degree in 1904. He was one of the first staff members of the United States Forest Service, which was founded in 1905, and did research in white pine restoration in southern New England. In 1908 he joined Eastman Bros. & Bancroft, of which his father was a co-founder. He served in various capacities with the store management and was merchandise manager for several years. In 1932 he joined Federal Life and Casualty Insurance Company, with which he remained until his retirement.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Bessie Clifford Eastman, whom he married in Bath on October 18, 1906; two daughters; and two sisters. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1910 CHARLES WILLIAM WALKER, who was in the lumber business in Skowhegan for nearly fifty years, died in that town on June 6, 1959. Born on December 8, 1888, in Mercer, he prepared at Skowhegan High School, attended Bowdoin for two years, and returned to Skowhegan in 1908 to engage in the lumber business. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Eva LaCasce Walker, whom he married in Skowhegan in 1908; a son, William N. '41; two daughters, Mrs. Muriel Dubuc of Fort Totten, N. Y., and Mrs. Lois Richmond of Veazie; and five grandchildren. He was a member of Zeta Psi fraternity.

1914 LESLIE NATHANIEL STETSON, retired assistant vice president of Peter A. Frasse & Company, died on July 18, 1959, in Lakewood, N. Y. Born on February 14, 1890, in Brunswick, he prepared at the local high school and attended Bowdoin from 1910 to 1915. Following World War I, during which he was in the Chemical Warfare Service, he became foreman of the open hearth plant of the Lackawanna Steel Company in Buffalo, N. Y. In 1925 he joined Peter A. Frasse & Company, steel products distributors. He was a former chairman of the Buffalo Chapter of the American Society of Metals, a past president of the Western New York Warehouse Association, and a past president of the Amigos Club.

A member of the American Legion and the Lions Club, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Alfareta Graves Stetson, whom he married in Brunswick in October of 1920; two daughters, Mrs. George J. Hartley of Lakewood, N. Y., and Mrs. Peter E. Rogers of Rye, N. Y.; a sister, Miss Bertha M. Stetson of Brunswick and St. Petersburg, Fla.; a brother, Irving W. of Brunswick; and four grandchildren. His fraternity was Zeta Psi.

1915 HARRY GUSTAVE CROSS, Chairman of the Board of the Waterman-Waterbury Company of Minneapolis, Minn., died on July 2, 1959, in Wayzata, Minn. Born on October 19, 1890, in Amboy, Minn., he prepared at Red Wing (Minn.) High School and the Shattuck School and attended Bowdoin for two years. A veteran of World War I, he was a banker in Red Wing and in Chicago before entering business in Minneapolis in 1919. In 1946 he became president of both the Waterbury Company and the Waterman-Waterbury Company. He was also a director of the Third Northwestern National Bank in Minneapolis and a trustee of the Shattuck School. For many years he served as president of the Minnesota Bowdoin Club.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Madeline Feuillade Cross, whom he married in Paris, France, on November 19, 1918; four daughters, Mrs. Joe Dobelman of Minneapolis; Mrs. Ray Fey jr. of Eau Claire, Wis.; Mrs. Keith Anderson of Baraboo, Wis.; and Mrs. James Hansen of Minneapolis; and a son, John of Rochester, Minn. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1918 NEIL EUGENE DAGGETT died in Milo on May 20, 1959. Born in that town on October 20, 1896, he prepared at Milo High School and left Bowdoin in 1917 to join the American Field Service. He received two citations for bravery as an ambulance driver in removing wounded under fire. Following the war he returned to Bowdoin and was graduated in 1920. He worked for a year in Chicago with the Union Bag and Paper Company and then was transferred to Pittsburgh. He left Union Bag in 1928 to join E. H. Rollins and Sons, also in Pittsburgh. In 1932 he returned to Milo, where for 18 years he was proprietor of Daggett's Pharmacy. For the past few years he had owned and operated Smith's General Store.

A member of the American Legion, the Masons, and the Lions Club, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ruth Little Daggett, whom he married in Hudson Falls, N. Y., on September 20, 1920; a son, Neil E. jr. of Milo; a daughter, Mrs. Ellen D. Youlden of Westwood, Mass.; a brother, George of New York City; and six grandchildren. His fraternity was Psi Upsilon.

1922 CECIL FRANK THOMPSON, M.D., for more than thirty years a physician in Phillips, died in Farmington on July 8, 1959. Born in Freeman on November 15, 1899, he prepared at Kingfield High School and taught school in Kingfield for a year before entering Bowdoin. Following his junior year he returned to Kingfield to teach and in the fall of 1922 entered Tufts Medical School. He received his Bowdoin degree in 1923 and his M.D. degree in 1926. He interned for a year at the Eastern Maine General Hospital in Bangor and set up his practice in Phillips in 1927.

A past president and treasurer of the Maine and Franklin County Medical Associations, Dr. Thompson was a member of the staff at the Franklin County Memorial Hospital. The Class of 1959 at Phillips High School dedicated its yearbook to Dr. and Mrs. Thompson in appreciation of their "personal interest and willing service" to the school and town. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Olive Ross Thompson, whom he married in Phillips on June 10, 1922; a son, Gordon '54; two daughters, Mrs. Nelda Worthley of Cumberland Center and Mrs. Jean Dibden of Galesburg, Ill.; a sister; three brothers; and four grandchildren. His fraternity was Chi Psi.

1924 RALPH ELLERY BLANCHARD, manufacturer of plastics products, died in Winnetka, Ill., on August 2, 1959. Born on July 23, 1902, in Portland, he prepared at Deering High School and following his graduation from Bowdoin spent six months in Europe, including study at the University of Grenoble in France. He joined the Du Pont Company in February of 1925 as a plastics salesman and spent the next 18 years in Arlington, N. J., and Chicago.

He resigned from Du Pont in 1943 to become assistant manager of a plastics firm and four years later founded the Reblan Company to market several plastics products of his own invention.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Helen Barrett Blanchard, whom he married on September 5, 1931, in Kenilworth, Ill.; a daughter, Mrs. Nancy Borgstrom; a son, Peter B.; a brother, Dr. Norman K. Blanchard of Cape Elizabeth; and two grandchildren. His fraternity was Theta Delta Chi.

Word has also been received of the death of the following Alumni. Appropriate notice will appear in the October Alumnus.

1930 RONALD BRIDGES, Director of Religious Information for the United States Information Service, disappeared on May 15, 1959, while fishing on the Pennamiquian River near West Pembroke. Searchers found his cane and abandoned boat in the stream. Born at West Pembroke on November 23, 1905, he prepared at Pembroke High School and attended Bates College for two and one-half years. He also taught school at Sanford High School for three years before entering Bowdoin in 1929 as a senior. He received a master of arts degree from Harvard in 1932 and held honorary degrees from more than a dozen colleges and universities, among them Bowdoin, Pacific University, Grinnell, Pacific School of Religion, Nassau, and the University of Maine.

After graduating from Bowdoin he taught at the Wassookeag School in Dexter and at Milton (Mass.) High School. From 1942 to 1945 he was a member of the faculty at Arizona State College. He was elected president of the Pacific School of Religion in 1945.

Dr. Bridges was elected Moderator of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in 1944, becoming the youngest Moderator in the history of the Council and the first to be given a unanimous vote. He also served as president of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and as executive director of the Central Department of Broadcasting and Films of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

In politics he was Maine Young Republican chairman and a candidate for Congress in 1936. He served as managing editor of The Republican, published in Chicago, from 1938 to 1940.

The late Robert P. T. Coffin '15 once wrote of Ronald Bridges, "I have yet to come upon another person like him. For honesty, sincerity, enthusiasm, and sheer common sense, I have yet to find his match. He is thorough and conscientious and yet his mind moves like quicksilver. He is a brilliant speaker and thinker on his feet. Nobody in New England is so well grounded in public affairs as he is. He is a man who overflows New England and belongs to the land at large."

Ronald Bridges was the visiting Tallman Professor at Bowdoin in the spring of 1954. In June of 1955, when the College conferred an honorary degree upon him, the citation said, in part, "... dedicated to ideas and their felicitous expression, to people and their humane understanding, to Maine and its magnanimous appreciation. Effective lay preacher, fascinating conversationalist, one who without embitterment has known the fortunes of politics, enlivened by what would have enfeebled others, his rare humor, lively imagination, and perceptive intellect have brought to religious teaching and administration, and the ecumenical movement, life and inspiration."

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Helen Emery Bridges, whom he married in Sanford on October 10, 1931; two sons, William E. of Wellesley, Mass., and Daniel F., a student at Washington and Lee; his mother, Mrs. Alina F. Bridges, and a sister, Doris, both of Milton, Mass.; and a brother, Senator Styles Bridges of New Hampshire.

1935 EDWARD FREDERICK ROBINSON JR., a salesman for Boit, Dalton, and Church Insurance Company in Boston, died suddenly in Wareham, Mass., on June 29, 1959. Born in Needham, Mass., on October 26, 1912, he prepared at Governor Dummer Academy and the Huntington School. Following his graduation from Bowdoin he was for three years in the investment business in Boston before becoming a field representative for General Motors in Needham. During World War II he was an investigator with the Office of Price Administration. He also worked for the Moore Pen Company before joining Boit, Dalton, and Church.

A member of the Maynard (Mass.) Lodge of Elks, he was for ten years active in Boy Scout work in Maynard. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Virginia Nichols Robinson, whom he married in Newton Highlands, Mass., on April 22, 1938; a son, Edward F., 3rd; a daughter, Leigh; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Robinson of Stowe, Mass.; and two sisters, Mrs. Phyllis Conington of Stowe and Mrs. Frances Bulkey of Odessa, N. Y. His fraternity was Theta Delta Chi.

1937 SARGENT JEALOUS, D.O., prominent Maine osteopathic physician and radiologist, died suddenly in Portland on June 4, 1959. Born August 4, 1915, in Winslow, he prepared at Lebanon (N.H.) High School and attended the University of Vermont for a year before transferring to Bowdoin. Following his sophomore year he entered the Philadelphia College of Osteopathy, from which he was graduated in 1939. He interned at the Osteopathic Hospital of Maine and also served his residency in radiology there. He maintained a practice in Saco for 14 years and during that time served as medical director and chief of staff of the Saco Osteopathic Hospital. He was appointed associate radiologist at the Osteopathic Hospital of Maine in 1955.

Dr. Jealous was a past president of the Maine Osteopathic Association and a member of the American Osteopathic College Board of Radiology. On the state level he was a member of the Advisory Council to the Hill-Burton Hospital Construction Program, a member of the Advisory Council on Public Health of the State Health and Welfare Department, and a member of the Maine Highway Safety Committee.

A member of the Elks and the Masons, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Annette Smith Jealous, whom he married in Lebanon, N. H., on May 25, 1940; three sons, Frederick S., James S., and Willard S.; a brother, Bradford '41; and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lionel F. Jealous of Thomaston. His fraternity was Kappa Sigma.

1938 JOHN WOODBURN DILLER, a dentist in Skowhegan and Livermore Falls for some years, died in Skowhegan on June 14, 1959. Born in Philadelphia on September 26, 1917, he prepared at William Penn Charter School and Skowhegan High School. Following his graduation from Bowdoin he studied for four years at the University of Pennsylvania Dental School and received a D.D.S. degree in 1942. During World War II he spent four years in the Army Dental Corps, with service in Europe. He set up practice in Skowhegan in 1946.

A member of the American Legion and the Livermore Falls Lions Club, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Arlene Curtis Diller, whom he married in Durham, N. C., on December 24, 1942; two sons, Peter and John W. jr.; his parents, Dr. and Mrs. William H. Diller of Philadelphia; and a brother, William H. jr. '37. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1946 ARTHUR HASKELL SAMPSON, JR., M.D., Chief of Staff and Head Surgeon of Miles Memorial Hospital in Damariscotta, died June 25, 1959, when his plane crashed at Biscay Pond near that town. Born in Boston on May 17, 1925, he prepared at the Huntington School and entered Bowdoin in January of 1943. Following his first semester he was called up in the Navy Reserve and, along with many other Bowdoin men, did pre-medical work with the Navy at Bates. He received his M.D. degree from Yale Medical School and interned at the Central Maine General Hospital in Lewiston. During the Korean War he served as an Air Force flight surgeon with the rank of captain and flew many combat missions. He was awarded the Bronze Star.

Dr. Sampson joined the staff of Miles Memorial Hospital in 1954 and was also Civil Defense medical director for Lincoln County. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Sampson of Wellesley, Mass.; and a sister, Mrs. J. Murray Smart of Cape Elizabeth. His fraternity was Zeta Psi.

In memory of Dr. Sampson a number of people in the area which he served have started a fund to perpetuate his name by some sort of fitting and permanent professional memorial, in all likelihood to be connected with the Miles Memorial Hospital. Contributions may be sent to the Dr. Arthur Sampson Memorial Fund, in care of Dr. Rufus E. Stetson, Damariscotta.

1957 ALLEN MARSHALL LANES, a first lieutenant in the Army, died in an automobile accident near Lockport, N. Y., on June 18, 1959. Born in Boston on August 25, 1935, he prepared at Lynn English High School and at Bowdoin played end on the varsity football team. He was also a member of the White Key for two years, served on the Board of Proctors, and majored in government. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army Reserve at Commencement of 1957 and began a two-year tour of active duty that fall. He was assigned to the anti-aircraft group at Fort Niagara, N. Y., and was scheduled to leave the Army in October. Surviving is a sister, Mrs. Donald Feingold of Peabody, Mass. His fraternity was Alpha Rho Upsilon.

STANTON GOULD SMITH, College Forester for twelve years and a pioneer government forester, died in Brunswick on August 3, 1959. Born on July 19, 1882, in Berkeley, Hartford County, Md., he attended the Westtown School in West Chester, Pa., and was graduated in 1905 from the Yale School of Forestry. He entered the United States Forest Service soon after receiving his master of forestry degree and remained with it until 1919. For many years he lived in the West, where his chief duty was locating sites for national parks. These included the Grand Canyon and Mount Rainier. From 1912 to 1919 he was supervisor of the Cascades on Puget Sound. From 1919 to 1933 he was engaged in private business, part of this time with the Maine Feldspar Company in Auburn. During the 1930's he was associated with the Civilian Conservation Corps. He retired in 1945 and purchased the DeCoven Farm on the Mere Point Road in Brunswick.

Mr. Smith was a member of the American Forestry Association and the Society of American Foresters. For several years he also served the town of Brunswick as a tree warden, advising the town manager and the selectmen on tree plantings. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Alice Miller Smith; two daughters, Mrs. Ian MacInnes of Bangor and Miss Dorothy G. Smith of Brunswick; one sister, Mrs. Dorothy Abbott of Brunswick; and two grandchildren.

Former Faculty

CHARLES HAROLD GRAY, a member of the faculty at Bowdoin for eight years and from 1930 to 1933 Pierce Professor of English, died in New York City on May 14, 1959. Born on February 13, 1892, in Guthrie, Okla., he was graduated from the University of Washington in 1913 and received a doctor of philosophy degree from Columbia in 1931. As a Rhodes Scholar he studied at Oxford University's Lincoln College from 1914 to 1917. Before joining the Bowdoin faculty in 1925 he taught at Reed College, Columbia, Adelphi College, and St. John's College.

Professor Gray left Bowdoin in 1933 and taught for seven years at Bennington College in Vermont, including one year as acting president. In 1940 he became dean of Bard College and four years later was named Bard's president. In 1947 he became head of the English Department at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. In 1951-52 he was Fulbright Visiting Professor at the University of the Philippines, and in 1953 he became director of the division of academic studies at the Juilliard School of Music in New York.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Helen McGregor Gray, whom he married on December 22, 1919; two sons, McGregor and Carlyle; two brothers, Ralph E. and Philip J. of Seattle; and four grandchildren.

Honorary

1948 AMBROSE LANSING, world renowned anthropologist, died on May 28, 1959, at his ranch home near Apache Junction, Ariz., in the Superstition Mountains. Born on September 20, 1891, in Cairo, Egypt, he was graduated from Washington and Jefferson in 1911. For many years curator of Egyptian Art in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, he was known as a leading Egyptologist. He directed a 1934 expedition that uncovered perhaps the earliest mechanical toy — a dancing doll of ivory found near Lisht, south of Cairo. The doll was said to date back to 2,000 B.C. In subsequent expeditions in 1935-36 he returned with funerary objects from the tomb of the parents of Sen-Mut, an Egyptian politician and favorite of the great Queen Hatshepsut, who reigned about 1500 B.C. He also uncovered a 3,800-year-old tomb said to have been that of the chief priest at Memphis, near Lisht.

A Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Dr. Lansing wrote extensively on Egypt and belonged to many historical societies. He is survived by his wife, Caroline; a son, Dr. Cornelius Lansing of Chapel Hill, N. C.; and a sister, Mrs. Herbert Allen of Westfield, N. J. The citation read at Commencement of 1948, when Bowdoin conferred upon him an honorary doctor of humane letters degree, said, in part, "... a summer resident of Maine who combines the efficiency of the specialist with the outlook of a broadly trained and liberally interested man of the world; honored today by a college that rejoices to honor learning."

Medical School

1898 FRED FERNALD, M.D., for more than 50 years a general practitioner in Nottingham, N. H., died at his home there on July 17, 1959, at the age of 84. Born in Nottingham on September 17, 1874, he prepared at Northwood Seminary and attended the Maine Medical School for a year. He received his M.D. degree from Baltimore Medical College in 1900 and set up his practice in Nottingham. He served for more than 25 years as doctor at the Rockingham County Home. In 1953 the University of New Hampshire awarded him a special citation for his work as a country doctor. A past president of the New Hampshire Medical Society, he was a staff member at Exeter Hospital and a member of the New Hampshire Surgical Club. He also served as town moderator in Nottingham for more than 40 years.

Surviving are three daughters, Miss Elizabeth C. Fernald of Nottingham, Miss Mary L. Fernald of Hanover, N. H., and Mrs. Josephine F. Welch of Raymond; two sons, Frederick L. and John T., both of Nottingham; 12 grandchildren; and four great grandchildren.

1899 CHARLES HENRY LEACH, M.D., who practiced medicine in Maine for more than 55 years, died in Rockland on May 26, 1959. Born in Waldoboro on September 25, 1873, he prepared at Higgins Classical Institute and following his graduation from the Maine Medical School in 1899 set up his practice in Litchfield. He later practiced in Lincolnville and South China before moving to Tenants Harbor in 1917. He also served as superintendent of schools in Lincolnville for several years. A member of the Masons and the Maine Historical Society, he is survived by a niece, Miss Margaret Heald of Islington, Mass., and several cousins.

News Of The Classes

1850 The First Congregational Church of Washington, D. C., established in 1865 largely through the efforts of General Oliver O. Howard, is to be torn down and replaced by a new church. However, a window memorializing General Howard will go to Howard University, which he founded in 1869.

1888 Horatio Card and Albert Tolman returned for Commencement and were again the senior alumni on campus.

1889 Lory Prentiss has a new address: 7211 Eads Avenue, La Jolla, Calif.
Verdeil White of North Jay is in his ninety-fourth year.

1891 Secretary, Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln
38 College Street

Tom Burr and Charles Lincoln represented the Class at Commencement.

The Class Secretary has written a series of three articles on "China As I Knew It" in the Brunswick Record. The first installment, which appeared on July 2, dealt with his 1899 impressions. With characteristic humility and wit he observed, "I found the Chinese in my contact, when I spoke well enough to converse, friendly and, except for my strange ideas of social hygiene and medical treatment, co-operative."

1894 At a Maine Supreme Court memorial service in Portland on June 3 the late Arthur Chapman was honored as a courageous justice, a patriotic citizen, a dedicated family man, and a loyal friend.

1895 Dr. John French celebrated his 86th birthday on July 3. A resident of Green Pastures, N. H., he continues to assist high school students with their studies.

Joe Roberts was hospitalized with arthritis early this past winter. In late May he was hospitalized again for the first of two cataract operations. Despite all this, he remains cheerful. Bowdoin classmates and friends wish him better health.

1896 Secretary, Francis S. Dane
43 Highland Avenue
Lexington 73, Mass.

Class Secretary Francis Dane was the only member of 1896 back for Commencement.

1897 Secretary, George E. Carmichael
Wolfeboro, N. H.

Cook and Gilman returned for Commencement in June.

1898 John Dana was the only member of the class to sign in at Commencement.

Percival Baxter was recently pictured in the Brunswick Record with the commander of the Bangor Air Defense Sector at Topsham. The former Maine governor was making a tour of the SAGE installation.

Edward Wheeler, Acting Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masons, was honored at a dinner at the Lafayette Hotel in Portland on May 20. A large oil portrait of Ed was unveiled, and a large book containing his Masonic record was presented to him.

1899 Dr. Henry Marston was the sole member of the class to be back in June for his Sixtieth Reunion.

202 Reedsdale Road
Milton 86, Mass.

Representing the class at Commencement were Chapman, Edwards, and Williams.

1901 Berry, Gardner, Storer, and Wheeler returned for Commencement in June.

A Farmington High School youth received the first Dr. George Pratt Trophy for the best track performance at the spring sports assembly on June 12. The trophy honors the former Bowdoin track star and Farmington's first track coach.

1902 Secretary, Hudson Sinkinson
North Waterboro

Barker and Sinkinson represented the class at Commencement.

Harrison McCann's new address is 485 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

1903 Secretary, Clement F. Robinson
P. O. Box 438
Brunswick

Seven of the thirty members of the Class were present for a Commencement morning breakfast at the Stowe House in Brunswick. They were Phil Clifford, Luther Dana, Ned Merrill, Mose Phillips, Clement Robinson, Leon Walker, and Tom White. With wives and other guests, there were fifteen present in all. John Greene and Sam Gray arrived later in the morning and attended the Commencement dinner.

Phil Clifford is a member of the standing committee of the Maine Historical Society.

Clement Robinson has presented to the College a framed letter from Admiral Robert E. Peary '77 to his father, Franklin C. Robinson '73, in which the famous explorer sketched the North Pole flag and discussed its conception. The letter is dated October 19, 1909.

On May 25 Jesse and Charlotte Wilson celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary. They live in their home on Elm Street in Topsham, built in 1784, which they purchased and restored in 1935. Jesse has been retired since 1953, when he sold his store, The Wilson Pharmacy, long a landmark on Brunswick's Maine Street. The business had been purchased by his father in 1875, and Jesse first operated the store in 1915.

1904 Secretary, Wallace M. Powers
37-28 80th Street
Jackson Heights
New York, N. Y.

In June Beane, Brigham, Burpee, Emerson, Frost, Leatherbarrow, McRae, Packard, Powers, Putnam, and Roberts returned for Commencement.

Bill Coan suffered a broken ankle in May, which kept him away from Commencement — the first time he's missed being back since 1947.

1905 Secretary, Ralph N. Cushing
10 Knox Street
Thomaston

Back for Commencement were Cushing, Donnell, Emery, Philoon, Pierce, and J. Williams.

1906 Secretary, Fred E. Smith
9 Oak Avenue
Norway

Copeland and Holman returned for Commencement.

Walter Powers was best man for his son, Philip '49, when the latter was married to Miss Susan Tilton Alexander in Bernardsville, N. J., on May 9.

Class Secretary Fred Smith was honored for his 53 years of service to the Norway National Bank at a testimonial dinner in Norway on June 17. He continues as a director of the bank.

1907 Secretary, John W. Leydon
3120 West Penn Street
Philadelphia, Pa.

Nine members of the class were back for Commencement in June: Adams, Allen, Haley, Halford, Leydon, Linnell, Pike, Roberts, and Winchell.

The Class held its annual picnic on Saturday, August 15, at Carolyn's in Cape Elizabeth.

The daughter of Dr. Lester Adams, Sarah Frances, was married on June 20 in Thomaston to Robert Phillips of Bristol, Conn.

Bill Snow's thirteenth grandchild, Jacob Adam, was born on Good Friday in Detroit.

1908 Secretary, Edward T. Sanborn
503 North Lionel Street
Goldsboro, N. C.

Campbell, Crowley, Pullen, Robinson, Scates, and Stetson returned for Commencement. They joined 1909 to help the latter celebrate its Fiftieth Reunion.

Recently the editors received an interesting letter of reminiscence from the Reverend Harry W. Kimball '92 of Needham, Mass. "I recall that I went through Bowdoin for about $400 a year," he writes, "and earned a quarter of this waiting on tables at summer hotels. The tuition was then $75.

"For us President Hyde made the College outstanding, although Professor Chapman was probably the most popular professor. He was good to the boys. It was under him that I took honors in English literature.

"On the whole I have always considered Elijah Kellogg of the Class of 1840 our greatest graduate. He wrote 28 volumes of stories for boys, and I have a complete set. I shall never forget the last time I heard him speak. He had driven up from Harpswell in a poor wagon drawn by a spavined horse. His trousers were tugged into his old boots. I don't suppose he weighed one hundred pounds. At the Alumni Dinner that afternoon there were many noted speakers. The last one was Elijah Kellogg.

"He rose and said, 'I have heard no words spoken this afternoon except the words "Bowdoin College." But although the flesh is weak, there is no decrepitude of the spirit.' Then he went on with an eloquence which brought that tired audience to its feet time and time again with cheers. Here is a bit of that old-time eloquence: 'Moons may wax and wane, the flowers bloom and fade, the seasons come and go, but the ties that bind a man to his intellectual birthplace can never be broken.' Is not 'intellectual birthplace' a good definition of a college?"

Sturgis Leavitt is Editor of Humanities in the South, the newsletter of the Southern Humanities Conference.

1909 Secretary, Irving L. Rich
11 Mellen Street
Portland 4

We will never forget our Fiftieth Reunion and all that transpired to cause that weekend to overflow with golden memories. Forty-five classmates and guests were present at the dinner. The twenty-seven members of the class who registered were Brewster, Burton, Crowley, Ellis, Ginn, Goodspeed, H. Hinckley, W. Hinckley, Hovey, Hughes, Hurley, Koughan, Manter, Moulton, Newman, Pennell, Pottle, Rich, Richardson, Scammon, Scates, Smith, Sparks, Stahl, Stanley, Stone, and Sturtevant. We were also very pleased that Mrs. Harold (Dorothy) Marsh traveled from Washington, D. C., to join us.

On Thursday 15 members of the Class went to Sunset Farm for an excellent shore dinner.

The Class held its Friday Commencement Dinner at the Stowe House. Twenty-six members, plus wives and friends, making a total of forty-five, attended. Reunion Chairman Owen Brewster reports that "the broiled lobsters were the best I have ever eaten."

We were pleased that so many members of 1908 and 1910 accepted our invitation and visited our Reunion Headquarters. 1910 has cordially invited us to join them in celebrating their fiftieth anniversary next year.

Reed Ellis was back for his Fiftieth Reunion, and to make it a family affair, sons Hobart '39 and Edward '44 returned for their Twentieth and Fifteenth Reunions, respectively.

Robert Pennell has been elected Vice President of the Class to succeed the late Leonard Timberlake.

The Arthur Smiths have announced the engagement of their daughter, Jane Allen Smith, to Paul Sears Mayo of Boston and Provincetown, Mass. Jane was graduated from Endicott Junior College in June.

1910 Secretary, E. Curtis Matthews
Piscataqua Savings Bank
Portsmouth, N. H.

In June Atwood, Bailey, Brown, Cary, Crosby, Evans, Hale, Matthews, Peters, Warren, and S. Webster returned for Commencement.

Bob Hale has been appointed the American member of the Permanent Commission of Conciliation (established by the Treaty of Arbitration and Conciliation between the United States and Switzerland in 1931.) The commission was set up to work out any problems which might arise between the two countries.

Rodney Ross has retired as President and Treasurer of the Hyde Windlass Company in Bath after 45 years with the company. His son, State Senator Rodney Ross Jr. '41, has been elected to succeed him in both offices.

1911 Secretary, Ernest G. Fifield
30 East 42nd Street
New York, N. Y.

Berry, Hansen, Howe, Hussey, Oxnard, Sanborn, and Weeks returned in June.

The Harvard University Press is publishing a book by Arthur Cole entitled Business Enterprise in Its Social Setting.

George Howe is the grandfather of Elizabeth Searles Howe, born to Lee and Nancy Howe '50 on June 29.

1912 Secretary, William A. MacCormick
114 Atlantic Avenue
Boothbay Harbor

Six members of the Class returned for Commencement: Bragdon, Briggs, Bryant, Marsh, Purington, and Woodcock.

Elden Barbour has taken courses in economics at Yale this summer. He returns in the fall to his teaching at Florida Southern College in Lakeland, Fla.

Class Secretary Bill MacCormick, presently Assistant Director of the Boothbay Region YMCA, was the subject of the "Personality of the Week" column in the Boothbay Register on May 14. It traced his career and told of his long and devoted service as a YMCA leader and an advisor to boys and young men.

Seward Marsh became "emeritus" as of July 1. He and Mary have purchased a home at 18 Green Street, Topsham, scarcely a mile and a half from the campus. They hope their friends will cross the Androscoggin and call.

Ned Morss, who is now on retirement status, has ended his long stay in the hospital and is under nurse's care at home. He reports "real progress."

Carl Skillin is convalescing from a coronary attack. He returned from Lakeland, Fla., to his Adamant, Vt., home in April.

Squanto Wilson still operates dollar stores in Winthrop, Livermore Falls, Auburn, and Norway. But he relies on the younger generation to see that nothing interferes with his "huntin' and fishing'."

At the end of the 106th annual convention, on June 23, Dr. Allan Woodcock assumed his duties as the new president of the Maine Medical Association.

1913 Secretary, Luther G. Whittier
R.F.D. 2
Farmington

C. Abbott, Conant, Dole, Kennedy, Lunt, McNeally, Moulton, Norton, Page, Philoon, Shackford, Whittier, and Wood represented the Class at Commencement.

The May 29 issue of Life magazine showed Senator Paul Douglas "waxing" eloquent. (Paul was pouring floor wax while his colleague, Senator Proxmire, operated an electric floor polisher. All in the interests of proving that the Senate had been wasteful in voting itself $150,000 for carpets.)

In an editorial note on June 21, the Portland Sunday Telegram praised Paul for his wit and humor. "Douglas is a humorist in the dignified, classical, and productive sense of the word," the editor wrote. "The Senate could use more."

Emily Taft Douglas, wife of Paul Douglas, was the main speaker at the Southern Illinois Women's Day program in April. An alumna of the University of Chicago, Mrs. Douglas is a former Congresswoman-at-Large, who served on the Foreign Affairs Committee and who preceded her husband in Congress.

James Philoon has moved his law office to his home at 250 Summer Street, Auburn.

"Helpful Hints for Rookie Representatives" was the title of a guest column in the Portland Sunday Telegram on June 21 by Sumner Pike. In the absence of the newspaper's political commentator, Sim had been invited to be a guest columnist.

Francestown, N. H.

The Class Secretary recorded the names of these classmates, back for our Forty-fifth: Chase, Cole, Donahue, Eddy, Farrar, Gray, Hayes, Hubbard, LaCasce, Loeffler, Merrill, Mitchell, Snow, Shepherd, Standish, Thompson, Verrill, and Weatherill. For Ed Snow and Ray Verrill it was their first reunion since 1914.

Since April "X" Callahan has been retired. After being engaged in the insurance business in Washington, D. C., for many years, he had served for several more years in the insurance department of the Veterans' Administration. His home is still in Chevy Chase, Md.

Pointing out that he became two-thirds of a century old in February of this year, Sam Chase of the School of Medicine at Western Reserve University in Cleveland writes, "Instead of being allowed to finish my career in relative peace, my load of responsibility has been at least doubled recently. Upon the death of the former head of our Department of Anatomy, I have been made Acting Director, thereby acquiring a king-sized load of headaches."

We are sorry to have to report that Henry Dixon of Norwich, Conn., is still in poor health and still in the hospital. Ruth has written the Class Secretary that Henry "still has his quick sense of humor, which delights those who take care of him."

Harold Hayes is still practicing law in Dover-Foxcroft, with his son Stuart '44. The law office was opened by Harold's father in 1891 and has been operated by one or more members of the family ever since. Harold is Vice President of the Maine State Bar Association.

Classmates and friends extend sympathy to Bob Leigh in the death of his wife, Mildred Boardman Leigh, on May 19.

Bob will retire in September as Dean of the School of Library Service at Columbia University.

Ned Mason writes from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., "Still maintain a real estate office. My wife works with me as a licensed broker. Several years ago we started a symphony orchestra and I keep busy holding down third stand in the eight-cello section. Also string quartets bi-weekly. We have a nice home close to the beach and live quietly amid flowering shrubs, greenery, and cool breezes."

The Galesburg (Ill.) Register-Mail for June 1 carried a long and interesting article under the title "Professor Newcombe to Leave Knox." Giving a few of the high points of Alfred's career and dwelling at some length on his pithy sayings and comments, the article was mainly a tribute to him. It began, "Dr. Alfred W. Newcombe, a teacher of history, is about to leave the college that he has served and the city where he has lived for more than 38 years. The departure of the distinguished service professor emeritus from Knox College ends an epoch for both school and city. It has been an epoch filled with more than 3,000 students spellbound by a human, vital, and vibrantly alive approach to the intriguing web spun by the Arnett Mitchell '12 is shown here receiving a Bowdoin mirror from Sam Chase '14, representing the Class of 1912, at a testimonial banquet held at the Southern Hotel in Columbus, Ohio, on May 21. Approximately 400 educators, civic leaders, and other guests gathered to pay tribute to Arnett for his 38 years as Principal of Champion Junior High School in Columbus. He retired in June.

The main speaker of the evening was Superintendent of Schools Harold H. Eibling, who said, "When we see all that Dr. Mitchell has accomplished, it encourages us to continue our work. He has such splendid characteristics that I have tried to emulate some of them. He has made an enviable record."

"There are not many educators in the whole country who have served as principal of one school for 38 years. . . . Dr. Mitchell has given more of himself than was required by the board of education. It is impossible to measure the good he has done in this community. He has gone far beyond the call of duty.

"The rich contribution that he has made is exemplified in the lives of boys and girls of this community who have become fine citizens. It has been a pleasure for me to know him and to work with him."

Presentations to Arnett came from the Testimonial Citizens Committee, the staff of Champion Junior High School and also its Parent Teacher Association, Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, Lambda Boule of Sigma Pi Phi fraternity, the Testimonial Banquet Committee, and the Bowdoin Class of 1912.

course of world history — students lured by the burning enthusiasm driving the man at the lectern.

"Ask any alumnus of his courses in Renaissance and Reformation or the French Revolution."

"Too, it has been an epoch of enthralled listeners to innumerable public addresses, from ceremonial occasions demanding dignity and eloquence, to informal and informative chats."

The article closed with a quotation from the president of Knox College: "There's really no way to express a thought about a person like Newky. But the finest things I could say about a man I would say about him."

Phil Pope writes from Walla Walla, Wash., "Two classes at St. Paul's School for Girls keep me fairly busy, and I am enjoying the work, although I never expected to end my academic career teaching teenage girls. Getting general science across to eighth graders is not too easy, but biology for sophomore high school girls goes pretty well. In fact, I find most of them more responsive than most college students, and many act as if they want to learn. The feminine admiration I get is enough to turn a man's head!"

The June issue of the Dartmouth Alumni Magazine carried an interesting item and photograph on the occasion of Ken Robinson's retirement as Professor of English. He was quoted as saying, "With all its moments of near-insanity, teaching has always been more fun than anything else I could imagine doing."

The news item was interesting enough for us to reprint here: "Kenneth A. Robinson, Professor of English, was graduated from Bowdoin College in 1914 and received his Master's degree from Harvard in 1916. He joined the Dartmouth faculty the following year, and in 1923 he was made a full professor. A specialist in Twentieth Century American fiction and drama, he is the editor of Essays Toward the Truth and Contemporary Short Stories; and, in addition, many articles, short stories, and poems have borne his by-line in such magazines as Life, The New Yorker, Saturday Evening Post, Scribner's Magazine, and others. He is a member of the American Association of University Professors, the Modern Language Association, the Players' Club of New York City, Phi Beta Kappa, and Delta Upsilon. He is listed in Who's Who in New England and Who's Who in the East. Few Dartmouth men who ever took his English 96 course on Twentieth Century American Literature will ever forget the 'little red schoolhouse' lecture, Professor Robinson's reminiscences about early days of the American theater.

"Next year Professor Robinson will journey a long way from Hanover to start teaching at coeducational Birmingham-Southern College in Birmingham, Alabama."

Cliff Russell writes, from Collingswood, N. J., "The first year after my retirement in April, 1955, was a period of readjustment, but I have truly enjoyed indolence during the past three years. I can proclaim my health is prime, due, I like to believe, to my continued interest in proper nutrition and a daily stroll of four to five miles."

Herb Shea has retired from the Columbus and Southern Ohio Electric Company to a place in Reynoldsburg, on the outskirts of the city. He says, "We have a spot of two acres, which is mostly in lawn, trees, shrubs, flowers, and so forth, the care of which provides me with all the exercise I can use and also something to keep up my interest in life. . . . We have five young grandchildren who live within a few miles. They visit us quite often and provide all the excitement we need."

Prentiss Shepherd of Paine, Webber in Boston reports, "I am still at the old stand, trying to look after the investments of the children and grandchildren of some of my original customers. Believe it or not, theirs is some problem. . . . I am very proud to be the grandfather of two grandsons and one granddaughter. You know, you haven't lived until you have grandchildren."

Ed Snow was the high school graduation speaker at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., on June 10. The next day he, Mrs. Snow, and their granddaughter, Carol Mason, left for Brunswick to attend our Forty-fifth.

Col. Jim Tarbox of Tampa, Fla., regretted being unable to attend our Reunion. He writes, "My daughter, her husband (who is a lieutenant colonel in the Army), and their one child, a four-year old girl, are all in Orleans, France, where he is on duty."

Earle Thompson and his sister Ruth were generous hosts to the Class and our wives at the outing and dinner at his place in West Boothbay. It was a happy and memorable occasion. Earle has had a distinguished career, but after listing some of his many activities and jobs, he says with characteristic modesty, "You see, the story is not very exciting, but it has all been very pleasant."

1915 Secretary, Harold E. Verrill
436 Congress Street

In June Adams, Dow, Fish, Knowlton, MacDonald, Smith, and Talbot were back for Commencement.

Alton Lewis was the speaker at the North Haven High School Alumni Banquet on June 13. His subject was the new Sinclair Law. Alton was also elected president of the school's alumni group.

Clarence Robinson has moved to "the land of sunshine": his address is 1857 Hunt Lane, Clearwater, Fla.

Reuel Soule retired as manager of the Central Maine Power Company's Pittsfield District on June 30 after 31 years of service.

1916 Secretary, Dwight Sayward
62 Ocean View Road
Cape Elizabeth

Baxter, Fitzgerald, Garland, Ginty, Hargraves, Hawes, Head, Hodgkins, Ireland, Irving, Moulton, Niven, and Sayward returned in June.

Plank Boardman retired from his position as assistant vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston on April 30 after more than 32 years of service.

The Eugene Cronins' son, Lt. Paul Cronin, was married to Miss Carolyn Harkins of Lewiston on June 13. They are living at Williamsburg, Va., while he is stationed at Fort Eustis.

A farewell reception was held on June 25 for Harry Trust on the occasion of his retirement as minister of the Church-on-the-Hill in Lenox, Mass.

Charles Wyman is now Sales Manager at Healer Motors, Inc., Cadillac-Oldsmobile dealers in Watertown, Mass.

1917 Secretary, Noel C. Little
8 College Street
Brunswick

Seventeen members of 1917 signed in at Commencement: Bartlett, Bond, Chapman, Cook, Crane, Crosby, Humphrey, Little, Lovejoy, Maguire, Owen, Philbrick, Pierce, Ross, Stone, Webber, and Willey.

1918 Secretary, Lloyd O. Coulter
Plumer Road
Epping, N. H.

Returning for Commencement were Boyd, Coulter, Farmer, French, Gray, Norton, and Stetson.

Again this summer Professor Bob Albion headed the course in American maritime history at Mystic (Conn.) Seaport. Sponsored by the Frank C. Munson Institute, the course deals with the development of American merchant shipping from Colonial times to the present. This is the fifth summer the course has been offered.

Bob is a member of the standing committee of the Maine Historical Society.

Albert Prosser was elected a trustee of the Maine Audubon Society in May.

Captain Jack Sloggett and his ship, the S. S. Socony Vacuum, a 27,000-ton tanker, were pictured and written about at some length in the New Haven Register for May 24. With a crew of 42, including 10 officers, the 604-foot-long vessel makes a round trip between Beaumont, Texas, and New Haven, Conn., every eleven days and carries 220,000 barrels of oil. The article and photographs which accompanied it told of life aboard this modern tanker and something of Jack's work. He is a veteran of 36 years at sea.

1919 Secretary, Donald S. Higgins
78 Royal Road
Bangor

The Class held its Fortieth Reunion Dinner at the Hotel Eagle on Commencement Friday. Thirty-two members of the Class, as well as wives and guests, were present.

Those who registered in the Library were Albert, Angus, Atwood, Blanchard, Caspar, Coburn, Cole, Decker, P. Doherty, Farrar, Finn, Foulke, Graves, Grover, Hargraves, Hersum, Higgins, Lang, Lombard, McCarthy, McClave, McDonald, Mitchell, Morrison, Paul, Rollins, Sawyer, Simmons, Sme-thurst, Sullivan, and Whitcomb. The Bill Hills M'21 and Mrs. Helen Turner joined us at the Eagle.

On July 13, the day the Boston Herald-Traveler building opened, George Minot, Managing Editor of the Herald, wrote an extended article tracing the paper's history up to 1878.

Eben Whitcomb captained his 40-foot auxiliary craft, Maryleigh, from Northeast Harbor to Gibraltar, where he was taken ill last February. His son brought the craft home in June from an 11-month jaunt to various European ports.

1920 Secretary, Sanford B. Cousins
200 East 66th Street
New York 21, N. Y.

Cousins, A. Hall, LeMay, Rounds, Small, Waltz, and Zeitler represented the Class at Commencement.

Bob Cleaves is chairman of the legislative committee of the Citizens' Coliseum Committee in Portland.

An anonymous donor has given the Phillips Exeter Academy two teaching funds of unspecified size. One of them has been named in honor of Ezra Pike Rounds, former mathematics teacher and now Director of Admissions at Exeter.

At the May meeting of the Bowdoin Club of New Hampshire, Pike was re-elected Secretary-Treasurer.

Cloyd Small has been re-elected Secretary-Treasurer and Council Member for the Bowdoin Club of Worcester.

At a meeting on May 21 in Pickard Theater which marked the fiftieth anniversary of the Brunswick Chapter of the American Red Cross, Emerson Zeitler was presented a certificate in appreciation of his work for the Red Cross on the local and national levels by General Alfred Gruenther, president of the national organization, principal speaker of the afternoon.

A letter from national officials of the Red Cross accompanied the certificate and said, in part, "This certificate expresses the appreciation of the American Red Cross for your devoted and unselfish service as national fund vice chairman."

1921 Secretary, Norman W. Haines
Savings Bank Building
Reading, Mass.

Returning in June were Benton, Cole, Holmes, Pennell, St. Clair, and Schonland.

Pop Hatch, founder and headmaster of the Hatch Preparatory School, has retired. He will, as headmaster emeritus, provide a transition to the new administration. He founded the Hatch School 33 years ago, after teaching for three years at Cornell University and one year at Bow-doin. He re-established it in Newport, R. I., in 1951.

Pop's address is now 2 High Street, Dexter.

Dr. Harry Lyseth, retired superintendent of schools for the City of Portland, taught a course in "School Organization and Administration" at the University of Maine summer session from July 6 to August 14.

1922 Secretary, Albert R. Thayer
40 Longfellow Avenue
Brunswick

Bernstein, Congdon, W. Hall, Kimball, Martin, Morrell, Partridge, Pickard, Thayer, Thomas, Towle, Vose, B. White, Wilson, and Woodbury were back for Commencement.

Maurice Jordan has been named Assistant Treasurer of the Casco Bank and Trust Company in Portland. He heads the home improvement loan division.

Ray Pugsley heads 40 inspectors for the Navy Department at the General Dynamics Corporation in Groton, Conn. "We launched nuclear submarine number 6 on June 9," he reports.

Frank Stack continues to teach at Admiral Farragut Academy in St. Petersburg, Fla. His wife, Madelyn, serves as relief nurse at the academy. Their son, Hugh (9), is "knocking off A's in third grade."

Jonathan Tibbitts writes, "Still in the same place, right close by Shasta Dam. Am in the general insurance business. Also in county politics — am a County Supervisor. Both our youngsters are grown and away. Our daughter, Helen, teaches at the Army Dependent School in Darmstadt, Germany. Son, Jonathan jr., is an ensign in the Navy at Adak in the Aleutian Islands. He graduated from Cal Tech a year ago as a civil engineer." Jonathan looks forward to our next reunion in 1962.

1923 Secretary, Richard Small
59 Orland Street

The seven Classmates who returned in June were Bramson, Hill, E. P. Perkins, Philbrick, Quinby, J. Smith, and Wilder.

Two ladies in Larry Allen's family received degrees this past June. His wife, Ruth, a remedial reading specialist, received the master of arts degree in psychology from the University of New Hampshire on June 14. And their daughter, Marion, received the bachelor of arts degree from Smith College on June 7. She will take a position at the Harvard Medical School this fall.

Malcolm Burr's son, Sumner, received Hebron Academy's highest award, the Hebron Cup, at the June graduation exercises. He was given his award for "his personal contributions to the school in all its aspects . . . given in evidence of a spirit of commendable devotion, friendliness, endeavor, and responsibility, which qualities Hebron Academy holds in the highest esteem."

In June Brig. Gen. Earl Heathcote returned from a trip to the west coast of Mexico. He hopes to travel to the east coast of the United States this fall.

1924 Secretary, Clarence D. Rouillard
124 Roxborough Drive
Toronto 5, Ontario
Canada

To celebrate our Thirty-fifth in June, these classmates returned to Brunswick: Asdourian, Bishop, Blanchard, Blatchford, Bouffard, Burnell, Caldwell, Cousins, Dow, Dunphy, Gilpatrick, Grenfell, Hamilton, Jardine, Jewett, J. Johnson, Johnston, Lavigne, Lee, Litchfield, Lovell, McMennamin, Merrill, Morrell, Ross, Rouillard, Rowe, Simon, Towle, W. Weymouth, and Young.

Members of the Class, their families, and guests gathered at the Lookout Point House for our Friday outing and dinner.

Curt Caldwell, representative of Schirmer, Atherton, and Company, brokers, is Chairman of the Board of Selectmen in Sunapee, N. H.

Colonel Charlie Clavin has retired as a brigadier general after 35 years of service.

In May Red Cousins spoke to the Islesboro Book Club, on which occasion he unmasked himself as Franklin P. Lincoln, editor of "The Party Line," a regular feature of the Portland Press Herald.

Ken Dow's older daughter is teaching in Sharon, Mass., and is president of the teachers' association.

Les Ferguson writes, "Tried hard to make it in June but couldn't change appointments."

Cyrus Fernald was elected treasurer of the Maine Audubon Society in May.

Doc Grenfell, who retired to Skowhegan in the fall of 1957, keeps busy restoring an old family home (with singing, gardening, and Masonry on the side) between winters in Florida.

The New Yorker for June 20, 1959, carried an interesting 16-page profile of stock analyst Walter Gutman, who describes himself as a "Proust in Wall Street." While other analysts are solely or largely concerned with providing hot tips on the market for their clients in weekly communiques, Walter prefers to write fine phrases or, as the author, John Brooks, termed it, "a slightly haphazard amalgam of spontaneous remarks about whatever happens to be on Gutman's mind." The result is that his customers receive letters with references to demonism, Zen Buddhism, Judy Garland, and Pericles.

But this approach has brought results. Not only has he successfully predicted market changes, but he has also won the admiration of his readers. Brooks concluded that some people would be willing to pay for his free letter.

Bill Jardine flew to Paris by jet plane this August. He is also making his first visits to Spain and Portugal.

Bob Lavigne's son, Robert J. jr., a graduate of Springfield College, has been holding a teaching fellowship at the University of Massachusetts. This fall he will be Assistant Professor of Entymology at the University of Wyoming. He is married and has two children.

Dick Lee's daughter, Elizabeth, is engaged to Ralph Kilb, a research engineer with General Electric in Schenectady, N. Y.

Hugh Marshall's daughter, Enid, was graduated from the University of Maine on June 6 as a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Moses Ranney wrote last spring, "Still all out for S. S. Pierce and ever mindful of what F.D.R. said in 1932: 'Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors' — as stupidly and unnecessarily true then as it is today! Stop here to say wife, Katrina, recently joined the editorial department of the Suburban Free Press; daughter, Karin, now has two boys and a girl for 'Grampy Mo'; and son, Peter, graduates June 8 from Natick High, is 6' 2" tall, "B" average, knows his basketball, and so forth — in so many ways, I'm glad to report, unlike his father, a confirmed troglodyte, happy in many ways, but depressed, as are all thinking people, by today's growing conformity to 'man's inhumanity to man.'"

Class Secretary Clarence Rouillard has been appointed Head of the Department of French of University College in the University of Toronto, where he continues to serve as Head of the Department of Romance Languages and Literatures in the School of Graduate Studies.

During the 35th Reunion, Mrs. John (Peg) Stanwood was voted an honorary member of the Class. She has been Mal Morrell's secretary for the past nine years. At the Friday class dinner she was presented a Bowdoin chair by members of the class and a pocketbook by the ladies of the class. This is in grateful appreciation of the many services and interesting ideas and cartoons which Peg has supplied in connection with 1924's Alumni Fund efforts and reunions.

Bill Towle's son, William Geoffrey, received his bachelor's degree from Trinity College in June. His college career had been interrupted by service with the Army during the Korean War and five years of employment with Aetna Life following his discharge.

Our sympathy goes to Doug Young, whose wife died in December. Since 1954 Doug has been representative in Connecticut of the Acme Chemical Company of Milwaukee, Wis.

1925 Secretary, William H. Gulliver jr.
30 Federal Street
Boston, Mass.

Awards honoring two classmates were again presented to outstanding athletes at South Portland High School this year. The E. Lester Blake Memorial Plaque, given annually since 1955, is in memory of the former South Portland High and Bowdoin baseball captain. The Clyde E. Nason Trophy, awarded annually since 1949, honors the former South Portland track coach.

After 33 years Stanley Collins has retired from public school teaching. He is continuing a general law practice, however. His son, Stanley jr., is a Marine pilot, stationed in Japan. Stan is a colonel, USAR, Chief, Education Branch, CAMG unit.

On June 4 Noel Deering's son, David, received the Cosgrove Memorial Medal, awarded annually at Cunningham Junior High School, Milton, Mass., to the ninth grade boy who demonstrates the highest qualities of character and athletic achievement.

Charles Drummond has been promoted to Supervisor of the Paper Inspection Department of the Oxford Paper Company in Rumford.

Walter Hayes' son, Richard, a member of the faculty at Warwick (R.I.) Veterans' Memorial High School for the past three years, received a National Science Foundation grant to attend the summer institute in marine biology at Bowdoin. Walter's daughter, Nancy, is a teller in the Rhode Island Hospital Trust Company Bank in Providence.

Florence Hildreth, daughter of the Charlie Hildreths, was married on June 27 to Ian White of New York City.

Howard and Annah Preble were unable to attend Commencement as examinations, faculty meetings, and commencement kept them at the Choate School.

Carl Roberts has been named Biographer of the Maine Historical Society.

Classmates and friends extend sympathy to Weston Walch in the death of his mother, Mrs. Bessie Walch, in Brunswick on June 29 at the age of 80.

1926 Secretary, Albert Abrahamson
234 Maine Street
Brunswick

Back in June were Abrahamson, Hovey, Packard, and Wood.

Dr. Fred Dunham was married on June 14 to Miss Ruth L. Donnelly of Arlington, Mass.

Last year Tom Gay resigned his job at M. Lowenstein and Sons. He is now doing part-time consulting work in textile marketing and is also farming at Cornwall Bridge, Conn., his permanent home. Tom reports the arrival of a sixth grandchild in June.

Gordon Gentner has moved to Clarks Cove, Walpole, Mass. He says, "Through the help of my daughter Jane and her husband, I was recently made eligible to join the 'grandfathers club.'" In June Gordon was elected to the board of directors of the Westfield (Mass.) Chemical Corporation.

Classmates and friends extend sympathy to Gilbert Goold in the death of his wife, Margaret, on May 29 in Scarsdale, N. Y.

Harold Young continues in the motion picture business, doing the buying and the booking for theaters throughout New England.

1927 Secretary, George O. Cutter
618 Overhill Road
Birmingham, Mich.

D. Brown, F. Farrington, Holmes, Lancaster, A. Sawyer, Webber, and Whittier returned for Commencement.

Don and Adele Brown were back for Commencement and reported the arrival of three more grandchildren in recent months. This makes a total of nine, so Don claims the championship of the class.

He is still in Johnstown, N. Y., and is serving as Master of St. Patrick's Lodge No. 4, F. and A.M., this year, in addition to his responsibilities as Secretary, Treasurer, and Director of Revenue Requirements for the four telephone companies which comprise the New York Companies group of the General Telephone System.

Albert Dekker is starring in "Detour After Dark," which opened late in May in London, England.

George Jackson is on active duty with the Navy and is also teaching at the University of Maine in Portland. He and Sally enjoy being back in Maine and living at Cape Cottage. Their daughter, Margaret Ten Broeck, graduated summa cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa from Rutgers this year. Her husband, who is a candidate for a Ph.D. at Princeton, will be at St. Anthony's, Oxford, on a Fulbright grant this coming year. The Jacksons' son, Stuyvesant, enters Hoosac School this fall to prepare for Bowdoin. He will be the fourth generation Jackson to attend the College.

The Rudolph Lewsens' son, Robert, entered the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in July.

In June Roswell Moore wrote that he was leaving Albuquerque, N. M., to cover Colorado in a Horseless Carriage Club Tour. His vehicle: a 1929 Cadillac. "Then in a modern car to Massachusetts and Connecticut for the month of July," he writes. Ros jr. '54 is going to Germany to fly helicopters for the Army. John is in jet flying school with the Air Force. Each has one child, and Ros's daughter has four.

Alden Sawyer has been elected second vice president of the Maine Bankers' Association.

The Walter Whittiers' daughter, Julie, a sophomore at Wheelock College, spent most of the summer in England, where she did volunteer work for six weeks at the Parish of All Saints Poplar, in the East End of London, in connection with the Winant Volunteers Association. She also spent a week on Iona Island in Scotland and two more weeks touring Europe.

1928 Secretary, William D. Alexander
Middlesex School
Concord, Mass.

Members of the class who signed in at the Library at Commencement were W. Case, Chapman, Doyle, Greene, Leadbetter, Mostrom, and Parks.

Class Secretary Bill Alexander reports that 1928 had a good time with 1929 at the latter's Thirtieth Reunion dinner and outing. Those who were on hand to accept 1929's kind invitation and warm hospitality were Howard and Teed Mostrom, Steve and Eloise Trafton, Dick and Dodie Chapman, Don and Donna Parks, Don and Tilly Leadbetter, and Bill and Virginia Alexander. Dick and Elynore Thayer regretted being unable to attend as their daughter was graduating. The Tiemers had to stay home as Paul was not feeling up to snuff. Other regulars, such as Bernard and June Lucas, had business appointments that kept them away.

George Beckett reports the birth of son number two, James Lawrence Beckett, on October 14.

Hayward Coburn has been elected a member of the national board of the YMCA's of the United States.

Allen Fiske's son, Jeffrey, is mixing art and muscle at Marietta College, where he has been elected editor of the literary magazine and is rowing on the varsity crew.

John and Bee Gulliver were in Chicago in early June but managed to make Bee's reunion at Wheaton.

Classmates and friends extend sympathy to George Jenkins, whose mother died on April 18 at the age of 87.

Clink Johnson, Vice President in charge of state operations for the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company in West Virginia, was sorry he couldn't make Commencement as his vacation began the last week of June. Mary and Clink's oldest son, Arthur, is a senior at the University of Virginia this fall. Last year their daughter Betsy married Louis P. Kellenburger, and they have presented the Johnsons with their first grandchild, Catherine. Clink and Mary's other three children are still at home and in local schools.

Roger and Molly Luke left Montreal on June 11 with a group of naval engineers for an excursion trip through the new St. Lawrence Seaway.

Fletcher Means is assistant chairman of the Citizens' Coliseum Committee in Portland.

Dick Phelps' older daughter, Susan, graduated from the Rhode Island School of Design in June. She plans to continue her graduate studies in painting this fall.

Classmates and friends extend sympathy to Frank Walch in the death of his mother, Mrs. Bessie Walch, in Brunswick on June 29 at the age of 80.

Roger Ray is Treasurer of the Maine Historical Society.

Harald Rehder continues to be Curator of the Division of Mollusks at the U. S. National Museum (Smithsonian Institution) in Washington, D. C. He is kept busy by maintaining the collection (largest in the world) in good order, trying to answer an increasing number of inquiries, and attempting to do a modest amount of research.

Early in 1957 Harald was one of a party of four marine biologists from the Smithsonian that went on a scientific expedition to French Polynesia. For six and a half weeks he and his colleagues lived aboard the 55-foot motor sailer Mareva and pursued their investigations among the beautiful islands and coral atolls of the region.

Last year Harald was elected to the Board of Directors of the Natural Sciences Foundation, and he is now co-editor of the new journal, Indo-Pacific Mollusca. This past winter he was in St. Petersburg, Fla., as a judge of the annual Shell Show, sponsored by the St. Petersburg Shell Club. At that time he attended one of the monthly luncheons of the local Bowdoin club.

Harald has become interested in the problem of housing for single people — especially elderly ones — and since 1957 he has been a trustee of the Housing Foundation Designed for Single People. He is also on the board of directors of STARCO, Inc. (Sunrae-Tower and Renewal Co.) of Washington, D. C.

The Rehders have two children, Anne (11) and Alfred (9).

Ellis Spear, who teaches education at Lesley Junior College, was a member of the faculty at the 1959 University of Maine summer session.

Ronald Torrey is now principal of Windsor

(Mass.) High School. He had been principal of Ashland (Mass.) High School for the past two years.

1934 Secretary, Rev. Gordon E. Gillett
601 Main Street
Peoria, Illinois

On hand, many with wives and children, for our Twenty fifth were Aiken, Abbing, C. Allen, Ambler, Arnold, Burton, Cady, A. Clark, Clay, Cleaves, Dakin, R. Davis, Deane, Drake, Fletcher, Flint, Gazlay, Gillett, Griffin, G. Hackwell, Hand, Hardies, Hempel, Hickox, Kahill, Loth, K. Miller, Morris, Mullen, Nelson, Pike, Pope, Prince, Reid, Rounds, Silverman, Uehlein, Walker, Winchell, and B. Wright.

Our Twenty fifth Reunion was very successful. Following the reception at the Pickard Field House on Thursday, members of the Class journeyed to the Poland Spring House for our stag dinner. The family outing was held on Friday at Hermit Island, Small Point.

Carl Ackermann continues to work for the Arthur G. Curren Company, Boston food brokers. He was sorry that business kept him away from our 25th. His daughter Joan has completed her freshman year at Wheaton, and Susan will be a junior at Swampscott High School this fall.

The Woodbury Danas' daughter, Dorothy, has completed her freshman year at Smith.

Jim Guptill writes, "Sorry not to be able to make our 25th. The graduation of my twins, Paul and Gail, from high school conflicted and, of course, had priority. Best wishes to everyone."

Al Hayes has three children, Barbara (15), David (13), and Gary (9). In 1953 he left Louisiana State University, where he had been associate professor and chairman of the department of Germanic Languages since 1945. He is now sales manager of Intersound, a division of the Thomas Tenney firm, a Berkeley, Calif., sound equipment concern. Al's address is 3784 Thirtieth Avenue, Oakland 19, Calif.

Near the end of Commencement Weekend we received this wire from Al: "Regret having been unable to be with you. Please give my best to all the gang. We'll see you all in 1964."

Bill Rounds' son, Bill Jr., placed first in the 220 yard dash in the large schools division of the Maine state track meet, held at Bowdoin on June 6, to contribute five points to Deering High School's second-place total of 28.

Bertram Silverman is the New President of the Shaarey Tphiloh Synagogue in Portland. His grandfather, Philip Silverman, was the congregation's first vice president when it was founded in 1904.

Principal Neal Skillings' Wachusett Regional High School in Holden, Mass., is seeking state approval of specifications for a 17 room addition.

Thursty Summer is still with Sikorsky Aircraft, Milford, Conn., in customer relations — and due for his five year pin. His family is grown up: daughter Lee is a Smith junior, Rich is at Middlebury (varsity soccer and basketball), and Willi (15) and Brad (14) are at Milford Prep, Albie Booth's alma mater. His wife, Jessica, is teaching school.

1935 Secretary, Paul E. Sullivan
3432 Abalone Avenue
San Pedro, Calif.

Representing the Class at Commencement were Abelen, Dowse, Ellis, Hurley, Kelly, Low, S. Merrill, Niblock, and Whitman.

Dr. Leon Dickson's eldest daughter, Carolyn, enters Wellesley this fall. Leon expects his son, Leon Jr., to be in Bowdoin's Class of 1967.

George Fox has been named Alumni Council Member for the Bowdoin Club of Chicago.

John Graves reports, "Spent last year enjoyably, roaming around New York, Haiti, Panama, California, and Hawaii. Witnessed Hawaii's conversion to statehood. We all hope to go back there permanently — no more snow shoveling."

Dr. Elias Long, who continues to practice in Red Bank, N. J., is now an associate in pediatrics in two hospitals.

Harry Snow attended the Bowdoin mathematics institute this summer under a grant from the National Science Foundation. He hopes to return next June for our 25th.

Nate Watson has been named to the newly-created post of Assistant Principal of Morse High School in Bath. A member of the school's faculty since 1938, he has recently been the guidance director there.

Nate's daughter, Kathleen, valedictorian of the Class of 1959 at Morse, has won a scholarship at Boston University, where she will begin studies in September. She plans to major in romance languages and become a teacher.

Burt Whitman was elected a trustee of the Maine Audubon Society in May.

1936 Secretary, Hubert S. Shaw

On June 8 Colby College conferred the doctor of laws degree on President James Coles. The citation read by Colby President J. Seelye Bixler H'52 said: "Nearly a hundred years ago a young chemist became president of the oldest college in the land and the dynamism of his leadership is felt today throughout educational circles in America. A few years ago you came as a young chemist to the presidency of the oldest college in Maine and already both within Maine and outside the vigor of your educational leadership has had a marked effect. As Supervisor of the Underwater Explosives Research Laboratory at Woods Hole, and civilian technician of the United States Technical Mission in Europe, you served your country well — receiving in recognition the President's Certificate of Merit. A former Dean at Brown, you have been awarded by that institution an honorary degree. Your present career at Bowdoin is marked not only by the college's growth in material resources and intellectual power but by the extension of your influence in the surrounding community and its schools. A scientist who understands and interprets with sympathy the liberal arts, an administrator with courage who refuses to compromise, and an educational leader with a broad view of the responsibilities an institution of higher learning must assume, Colby College greets you on this occasion as a good neighbor and valued friend."

Excerpts from the citations read by President Coles follow:

DONALD N. YATES — “. . . a very model of the modern major general, highly trained in science as well as warfare. A crack meteorologist, his predictions set the date for D-Day in World War II. . . . He has proved himself a brilliant administrator and leader of men, as Chief of the Air Force Weather Service and in his present capacity as Commander of the Air Force Missile Test Center in Florida, which includes the Cape Canaveral missile launching site and the 5000-mile Atlantic Missile Range, aptly described as ‘the biggest and most expensive shooting gallery in the free world.’”

ELLIS O. BRIGGS — “. . . career diplomat who has spent thirty-four years in the Foreign Service of this country, sustaining the position of the United States in many trying situations. . . . It has been said that the successful diplomat will combine the qualities of integrity, the ability to inspire confidence, knowledge and foresight, and a strong sense of reality. Demonstrating all such virtues, whether it be in coping with the frustrations of diplomacy behind the iron curtain, or with the intricacies of the Good Neighbor policy, he thus applies his liberal arts training to a noble and necessary task.”

FRED C. SCRIBNER, JR. — “. . . lawyer, administrator and man of deep spiritual qualities. . . . Helping determine policy on fiscal affairs of the nation, he has had responsibility for the Secret Service and protecting the life of the President, for searching our luggage by the Bureau of Customs, and for control of drugs through the Bureau of Narcotics. . . . The world’s largest tax collector, he needs no sanctuary on this campus, for we respect the preception, intelligence, propriety, and discrimination which he brings to his exacting tasks.”

JOHN F. THOMPSON — “A practical but equally visionary scientist, during his long and vigorous career with interests spread around the globe from Canada to Australia, no foreign clime usurped the place in his heart of his native State of Maine, where he has seen more than seventy-five Georgetown summers. . . . The College of Parker Cleaveland, the first of this country’s great mineralogists, appropriately salutes this devoted and doughty son, scientist and scion of business.”

LAURENCE IRVING — “Physiologist and explorer, his pioneer studies in the adaptation of man to the bitter environment of the Arctic regions have brought him the eternal gratitude of all whose duty lies in those areas of such unfriendly and stern nature, but of such vast importance that even Mercator could not exaggerate it. In this year celebrating the 50th anniversary of the discovery of the North Pole by a Bowdoin son, and in the first year of Statehood for Alaska, it is doubly appropriate that Bowdoin should pay homage to this graduate, now a citizen of Anchorage.”

PHYLLIS C. WESTON — “Member of the Faculty of the Skowhegan High School, she has over a period of years rigorously trained in mathematics a long succession of boys and girls. . . . Teaching a severe discipline, inculcating sound work and study habits, she has . . . supplied to her students the incentive and encouragement to continue with their education. . . . Honored by the accomplishment of her myriad students for devotion to academic discipline, she now basks in the reflected glory of their achievements. Bowdoin today, in honoring her, honors all teachers, unknown and unsung, of such integrity, ability and dedication.”

(12 $\frac{3}{4}$ " by 25")

is an authentic reproduction of the colonial spindle mirror. It is made of hard wood and fitted with plate glass. The picture is a colored print of the Bowdoin campus of 1860. The mirror is finished in black and gold.

Priced at $15.75

THE BOWDOIN CHAIR

is a splendid reproduction of the straight arm chair of early New England. Sturdily constructed of selected hardwood, it is finished in satin black with natural wood arms. The Bowdoin Seal and the stripings are in white. Attractive and comfortable, the Bowdoin Chair merits a place in living room, study, and office.

Each chair packed in heavy carton — shipping weight 30 pounds. Shipment by Railway Express, charges collect.

F.O.B. Gardner, Mass. $27.00

Hand colored enlargements of two prints of the early campus ready for framing are also available.

The College in 1860 at $3.75 each postpaid.
